A DYING MESSAGE. Noble and Patriotic Sentiments in Conversation With an Ex-Confederate General. After his arrival at Mount McGregor, General Grant for a time continued to gain strength. He spent much of his time at work upon his book, though he received a number of visitors, among them the Mexican editors, and General Simon Bolivar Buckner, of Kentucky, who surrendered Fort De nelson to him. General Grant was unable to hold conversations with them, but wrote what he had to say General Buckper has given an exceedingly interesting account of his in-The two had been classmates at West Point and had served together in the Mexican war. "My call," said General Buckner to a reporter, "was purely one of friendship, and the interview, with the exception of the portion I am going to give you, was entirely personal in its character—just such an interview as you can imagine two old soldiers would have upon renewing their acquaintance after years of separation. What two men uncler these circumstances would say to each other you can easily see would be sacred to them. To me the conversation was eminently pleasant, though my pleasure was tinged with regret at the mournful cirumstances under which it was held. I told the General that I had called to see him as an old friend and to tender my sympathy while Russia for every $3 devoted to for him in his affliction, and in answer to this he wrote the first sentence of the interview, which was simply this: "I appreciate your calling very highly."

which was of interest to no one but ourselves, and which I do not feel justified in giving to the public. In the course of it, however, General Grant wrote one paragraph which I regard as of great importance, and which the public have a right to know. Here it is in full, just as he wrote it:

" 'I have witnessed since my sickness,' General Grant wrote, 'just what I have wished to see ever since the war-harmony and good feeling between the sections. I have always contended that if there had been nobody left but the soldiers we should have had peace in a that I know of who do not seem to be satisfied on the Southern side. We have some on ours who failed to accomplish as much as they wished, or who did not get warmed up to the fight until it was all over, who have not had quite full satisfaction. The great majority, too, of those who did not go into the war have long since grown tired of the long conlong since grown tired of the long con- half months; with operation, sixteen troversy. It is probable that no exact amount or number of its victims, and the complete details of the havor to property can ever be secured. The best information at hand is that five persons lost their lives. Four are reported missing and sixty injured, some so seriously that recovery is impossible. The scene in the Twenty-fifth ward of Philadelphia is one of desolation. Many houses are razed to the ground and others are completely gutted, while many more are roofless. The appearance of the localities on both sides of the Delaware river in the direct track of the tornado resembles a once thickly populated region that has been visited by an extensive fire.
