SOME FAMOUS VIOLINS.

Speaking of the famous violins at the Inventories exhibition in London, the Saturday Review says: "There is an interesting Nicolas Amati in Case VII. It is highly arched, and has a beautiful back in two pieces with finely-figured ribs and fully-developed corners-rather dog-nosed, if anything. It has golden the Cremonese school, there is on view presented to Charles IX. by Pius V., of dance, displays the wood to very great advantage over the model, in which there is not the same care in selection Mr. E. Springer. Mechanicsburg, Pa, writes: "I was afflicted with lung fever and abscess on lungs, and reduced to a wasking skeleton. Got a trial bottle of Dr. King's new Discovery for Consumption, which did me so much good that I bought a dollar bottle. After using three bottles I found myself once more a man completely restored to health, with a violin antiquaries. This violin is said to be one who will be their medical attendant, and of these. A viola, in some ways companion to the queen's, is lent by Lieutenant-Colonel Sandys. Better abused with paint and gilding, it starts with Mr. T. W. Ackins, of Grard, Kansas the same beautiful outline, but suddenly squares up. It is marked by the same fine choice of wood for the upper table, and the subject of its decoration on the matching up the back to entitle it to carry the palm from even the Sanctus Seraphin in the adjoining case—so far,

PURE LINE ENGRAVING.

The production of pure line engravngs, such as those of Raphael Morghen, is now almost wholly a thing of the past. Though a number of highlyt ained engravers are still constantly You have often seen women with employed to engrave on copper in the old methods at the Calcografia Regia, in Rome, yet this is done with the help of a large Government subsidy, and the art is thus kept alive in a purely artificial way. The truth is that the liking for this once popular style of engraving has passed away, and not altogether without reason. The engravings even of such a master of the burin as Raphael Morghen are usually dull and lifeless. They give us nothing but the dry bones of the picture; there is absolutely no udication of color, little or no rendering of texture, and not the slightest attempt even to suggest the special bandling of each master. A painting by Murillo in his caporoso manner and one by Guercino, with his hard touch Through our luxurious and perverted and gaudy color, appear of similar style in one of these line engravings. And this if not owing to any failure on the part of the engraver, but because he suffer from them most frequently and in- aimed at nothing more than to give a correct outline, and to some extent the light and shade of a picture; all other qualities were carefully abstracted, and the engraver worked, not from the picture itself, but from some laborious drawing, in which all suggestion of color was rigidly omitted. In most cases this transcript of the picture was not made by the engraver himself, and thus a double source of error arose; and the engraving, even in its mere outline, had much less spirit and vigor than it would have had if the contact between the engraver and the painting he was seeking to reproduce had been closer. In the engravings of Marc Antonio Raimondi-the father of the Italian school of pure line work-there is the same absence of color, but no lack of

PORTIERES.

There is an almost endless variety of material to use for portieres, but those who must contrive and economize are glad of hints about these things. A comparative cheap horse blanket, if a good color is selected, makes a very nice drapery and is far handsomer than the Canton flannel so much used, that really does not look very wel, and invariably collects all the dust of a room. A dark gray or brown blanket will last much longer, a frieze can be added of large blocks of dark, rich, contrasting colors of cloth, plush or velveteen. These tacked on with ornamental stitches over the bright stripes of the blanket, give a really excellent effect, and your drapery has a nice took that a lighter material cannot have. The expensive Mexican blankets are handsome enough without adding any borders, the bright colors making them very effective in an otherwise darkly finished room. Coarse bagging tacked over bright red wall paper and Japanese matting is a unique idea for wall decoration.
