Crowded rooms in winter schools, etc., are sometimes found to contain three or four times as much, and headaches and other ailments are the consequences of breathing the same air over and over again. There should therefore, enough fresh air for every person daily to amount to 20,000 cubic feet, or enough to fill eighteen rooms ten feet square and ten feet high. This would be amply supplied by an opening, tube or orifice three inches square with a moderate current. THERE are more cheerful prospects in the outlook for wool growers at the beginning of the new year than at the beginning of '85. Prices are better all around, and with the number of sheep somewhat diminished and the old stock of wool more closely used up than for a long time, there is some prospect of there being a scarcity of both wool and mutton. If there should be a material advance in the price of wool in the spring it would make a demand for stock sheep from farmers who have disposed of their sheep on account of the low prices prevailing for the last two years; and this, together with the tendency of all sheepmen to increase their flocks, will take nearly all the sheep off the markets, which are now offered. This would greatly increase the prices of sheep of all grades. That there is a prospect of the price of wool advancing cannot be doubted, when we take into consideration the facts that the stock of old wool is closely consumed; the new clip must be limited in quantity, on account of the diminished number of sheep from which it can be shorn; the price is already on the up grade; and that un-dervaluation and other frauds of im-porters, which affect the price of wool, are likely to be prevented by the steps which are now being taken in that direction. Many of the conditions, which in the past two years have had a depressing effect on the trade, are turned in favor of the industry and of higher prices. From this it may be seen that a review of the trade presents many encouraging features, and wool-growers have just cause for feeling more cheerful than for some time.

Or the many improved varieties the African, Egyptian, Embden, and Toulouse geese are most, desirable the last and comport themselve with a corresponding dignity and gravity. The yield ter pounds; Egyptian, one-half pound; Toulouse, one and one-half pounds. The goose is not a profitable bird to raise. except in places where it can procure its own subsistence during the greater part of the year. This it can easily do, where there is plenty of pasture, marshy land, running water, etc. Twenty-five geese are as effective in destroying grass among crops as one good hoe hand. Goslings require the same care at first as the young of other fowls, but are soon able to shift for themselves. Geese should have a house giving every five at least eight feet of room. Give each bird a nest two and one-half feet square. There should not be over four geese to one gander. The season for hatching is from April 15 to July 10. Goslings are best raised with a hen. Toulouse may be raised with a mother, and at four weeks-old, like old geese, may be turned into the field without housing or shelter. Geese are never unhealthy. Except in fattening, they should be unconfined.

THE delicate white celery to which we are accustomed-crisp and dainty as a filbert—that is to say, when dictators of the market do not "hold it for ed tordo an advance," and so allow it to deteriorate in the ground—is of very humble origin. The wild celery, or "smallage," is to be found in most temperate climates. It was formerly plentiful in England; and the Isle of Thanet and the meadows bordering the Trent were entirely over-run with it. In this latter situation the weed was observed by Marshal Tallart, who from his knowledge of Holland and Flanders was doubtless familiar with much of the horticulture of which these countries were as yet the chief homes. It is highly probable, therefore, that the marshal instructed some of his temporary English neighbors in an art with which they were hitherto unacquainted. But this is in no sense an implication that celery culture was not then understood in other parts of England. We know, on the contrary, that it was, though it was certainly a knowledge as yet confined to the wealthier and more educa-

Those who are interested in the hatching of broilers in large numbers, by the use of incubators and brooders, can have an opportunity of inspecting the methods in use by visiting Hammonton, N. There are quite a number of persons engaged in the pursuit, the largest operators of incubators being two young ladies, the Misses Pressey, who have quite a poultry village.

Is anything gained by transplanting? On this point Mr. Joseph Harris, in the American Garden, states that every one may easily notice how rapidly tomatoes grow when not transplanted, and he thinks the practice of transplanting detrimental. In a test he found cabbages left in the row headed as well as those which were transplanted. The largest and best celery he grew was not transplanted, and some gardeners are beginning to abandon the practice.
