FARM NOTES

Horses for Food .- Hippophagy has made some advance in Paris since 1872, the year following the war with Germany, during which the eating of horses was practiced by the Parislans, so long at least as the city was held in siege. In 1872 5,732 horses were slaughtered for food in the city of Paris. In 1883, the last year for which there are any returns, the number was 13,234. Before 1872, however, and even before the war with Prussia, in fact as far back as 1866, the slaughter of horses for food was duly licensed, although in 1866 there was but one butcher having the legal right to cut up and sell the carcasses of horses. The licensed horse butchers now number eighty. This fact, taken with the figures that indicate the consumption of horse meat, account for the many lowpriced "bouillons" about the streets of Paris. Veterinary experts declare that soup made from horse flesh is better than that made from the meat of the ox. That may be a question for gastronomic sharps to discuss, but it is by C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass. by C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass. said that the boulllon which smokes in a thousand Paris eating houses smells and tastes so nearly like that made before horses came to their end at the shambles, that no man's nose or tongue can tell the difference. Whether this resemblance is due to the similarity in the nature of the beasts, or to the artistic aptness of the cook, is a secret with the proprietor of the shop and the superintendent of his kitchen. Anenthusiastic advocate of hippophagy maintains that the horse has been improved since he has made his appearance at the table. His principal ground for argument in this direction is that one sees fewer raw-boned, broken-down hacks dragging Paris cabs and omnibuses than in former days. This might show that improvement in the average look of the cab horse had been purchased at the expense of the people's digestion. But it is also declared that when a horse gives signs of wearing out, his harness is taken off and he is simply housed where proper food increases his adignee tissue, and where idleness softens has muscles and tendons.

In selecting a dairy cow the most important point is a good constitution, indicated by large lungs, stomach and digestivce apacity; she should come from a good milking family; the eye should be bright, muzzle broad, nostrils thin and large, chest and hips broad, legs flat, udder broad, milk veins large and head small.

CALIFORNIA fruit growers begin to realize that the destruction of the forests on their mountains is especially hurtful to them, owing to the fact that a large portion of the state needs irrigating, and this demands a uniform flow of water. Besides this, the steepness and height of their mountains make torrents there unusually destructive.

Too much should not be expected from any branch of industry. The profits from dairying are due to experience. There is much to be learned about the management of cows, care of milk and the manufacture and sale of butter. Every little detail should be studied, and a familiarity with the characteristics and merits of all the breeds should be the object of the farmer if he wishes to succeed.
