A CONFESSION WHICH VERY FEW BUSINESS MEN LIKE TO MAKE.

The Evidences of Dry Rot-The Man Who Lacks the Courage of New Ideas -The Clever Man Without Practical Knowledge-Good Suggestion.

The history of a successful manufacturing concern is usually about as follows: Whatever the conditions attending its establishment, it is generally characterized by enterprise and energy of management. To realize the expectations which led to its organization, it must push vigorously for a leading place in the trade. Those who have put money in it have their capital at stake; those who enter without capital must make their services valuable, and acquire a competency for themselves during their years of maximum efficiency. The managers are under constant tension. They must keep ahead at any cost, and they do it.

Fifteen or twenty years later a different set of conditions obtain. The men who conduct that business are older and naturally less energe it. Probably they have become conservative. Having made money, they are no longer under the necessity of pushing for every advantage offered. Their attention is distracted by various interests which claim their time and thought. The social claims upon their time are more imperative than they used to be. Perhaps their healthis not as robust as it once was. Meanwhile their business runs along very well. It still feels the impetus of the years of its development. It pays good dividends and seems to be well established and prosperous. But it no longer leads. Younger and more enterprising houses have pushed to the front, and are skimming the cream of the trade.

THE EVIDENCES OF DRY ROT. It is evident that this can not go on for many years without a marked retrogression on the part of the house which is being left behind. Under these circumstances it is difficult for a man who has grown rich in the business to realize that he is no longer able to adapt himself to conditions which are always changing. He is apt to exaggerate the value of his experience, forgetting that half of it represents acquired habits, and that a good part of the other half is knowledge which is worth comparatively little at the present time. He is rarely able to recognize the evidences of dry rot in his business which others see so clearly, and be attributes the gradual retrogression of his con ern from a first to a second or third place to various external causes which have no more to do with it than the precession of the equinoxes. The fact is, he and his assoclates have lost their grip. They are able to follow, but not to lead, and in a very few years they are likely to find that very little remains of their once prosperous and lucratire business.

The only remedy for this is the one of all others most difficult to apply, involving a confession which few business men are willing to make. It is to bring into the busiress new blood-young men of intelligence and judgment, who have the incentive to energy and enterprise which inspired those who founded the business and made it great. Sometimes this can be done by advancing to positions of responsible management young men who have served the concern as clerks but more often it will be found that clerks partake of the peculiarities of their principals and conform so closely to their habits and traditions that they could not be counted on to give the business a fresh impetus. They are apt to have too little inde-pendence of judgment, and to lack originality of ideas. The fact that they have remained clerks and subordinates rather militates against the supposition that they can be made more useful in other capacities involving large functions,

THE KIND OR MEN NEEDED, The kind of men who are needed to infuse the spirit of progress into great enterprises are those who go naturally to the top, and such men are not often promoted. As a rule, they promote themselves. Nor is it often desirable that the new blood should be drawn from the veins of the trade. A man who has been brought up in the business is likely to be hampered by its traditions to such an extent that he lacks the courage of any new ideas that may come to him or from others. What is needed to stimulate a flagging enterprise is genius, and the less it is hampered by the fixed habits of the trade, the more useful it is likely to be. A c'ever man who comes fresh to a busine a of which he has no practical knowledge will accomplish more to advance it in one year than the veteran manufacturer would in ten years. He has no respect for established customs which can not be shown to be the best. He is not deterred from experimenting by the thowledge of past failures. The most obstinately unprogressive man in the world is the man who knows a thing can not be done "because he has tried it." He is misled by his experience, which is useful simply as showing, not that what he tried can not be done, but that he failed because he did not try in the right way. Every man who succeeds, does something which others have unsuccessfully attempted. The chances of success are all in fayor of the man who has not tried, It is the part of wisdom to anticipate the decline which, if not foreseen and guarded against, is inevitable from the causes constant y and imperceptibly at work in successful concerns. Every few years should le marked by changes such as we have suggested. Those who have passed the meridian of their careers should retire and give place to new men with the incentive to and capacity for vigorous and successful enterprise.—Iron Age.

The Wages Mr. Howells Received. "When I came back to America at 23 years of ag.," continued Mr. Howells, "I worked on Tas Yew York Nation and sold my crii les wherever I could. I then got average of about 67 a column. Shortly after this I went to Boston to be Mr. Tulos assistant, and in time became the editor of The Atlantic. As to the prices I have received for my various novels. I do not think it is right for me to say, in justice to the men with whom the contracts were made,' There is no doubt, however, that Mr. Howells gets very high prices for his present works. S. S. McClure, of the library syndicate, told me that Howells' short sories ted over $2,000 in aid of the widows and | were worth $200 or $200 aplece, and it is orphans of the victims of the mine disas- | said that Harper's, who have now engaged ter, and in time propose to increase the him exclusively, and to whom he gives all his writings from now on, pay him a salary ranging somewhere between that of the supreme court judge and the president of the United States. All of his novels have heen great successes, and I imagine that Harper's Magazine, in the engaging him, did it to offset, if possible, the great success of the war articles of The Century.—"Carp" in Cleveland Leader.

How LOST, HOW RESTORED! Just published, a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's clebrated Essay on the radical cure of Sperma-orrhoea or Seminal Weakness, Involuntary Seminal Losses, Impotency Mental and Physical Impediments to Marriage, etc.; also Consumption, cpilepsy and Fits, induced by self-indulgence, or the consumption of the consumption

Epilepsy and Fits, induced by self-indulgence, or sexual extravagance, &c.

The celebrated author in this admirable cssay, clearly demonstrates from a 39 years' successful practice, that the alarming consequences of self-abuse may be radically curred, pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matterwhat his condition may be, may cure himself, privately and radically.
