A New Circus in Paris. It was chic to be at the opening of the new Cirque Gller. This new circus occupies the site of the old Valentino in the Rue St. Honore. It is a luxurious place, provided with comfortable stalls, a tier of boxes, and a promenade-fumoir. Part of the boxes have been hired by the year by the swell clubs, the Cercle de la Rue Royale, the Cer-Rue Volney. The mundane apostle of this circus has been the Prince de Sagan, and the organizer of the programme the gentleman amateur, M. Molier, who has a private circus of his own at Passy. The great novelty of this circus is that during the entr'acte the arena sinks into the ground, and discloses a piscine nine feet deep. At present the Johnson family per-form swimming feats in the water, but the programme by piscatorial matches, in which members of the aristocracy will contend with rod and line and wriggling worm, the jo:key against the Union, the dukes against the counts. The puffery of this new rircus by means of names and titles is an illustration of a curious phenomenon of Republican society-the hiring out of social influence, the leaning of elegance for an even-ing, just as certain specialists loan out plate, flowers, or chairs for a kettledrum, -- Paris Cor.
