Antiquity of Bridges.-The first build es were of wood, and the earliest which we have any account was built in Rome 500 years B. C. The next was erected by Julius Cæsar for the passage of his army across the Rhine. Trajan's great bridge over the Donube, 4770 feet long, was made of timi er, with stone piers. The Romans also built the first stone bridge, which crossed the Tiber. Suspension bridges are of remote origin. A Chinese one mentioned by Kirshen was made of chains supporting a roadway, 830 feet in length, was built A. D. 65, and is still to be seen. The first large iron bridge was erected over the Severn in 1777. The age of railways has brought emarkable development in this brauch of engineering, especially in the construction of bridges of iron and steel.

Artificial Petroleum .- The action of superheated steam on molten cast-iron, rich in carbon, has yielded a product identical with the hydrocarbons forming crude petroleum. Berthelot thinks this discovery offers a possible explanation of the origin of petroleum, viz.: Sea-water penetrates fissures to depths where the earth is very hot, forming superheated steam, which, coming in contact with melted iron rich in carbon, is decomposed into hydrogen and oxygen. The oxygen unites with the iron to form oxide of iron, and the hydrogen combines with the carbon, the resulting hydrocarbons passing in a gaseous state to rock-strata suitable for their condensation as oil.

A simple way to strike lancet Gothic arches is to join the apex and a point of springing; bisect this line and draw a line at right angles to it. The intersection of this line with the springing line is the radius point.

A paint applicable to any sort of ironwork exposed to the weather consists of one-half gallon of good varnish, and one-half gallon of boiled linseed oil, with sufficient red lead to bring it to the consistency of common paint. Apply with a brush.
