THE STREETS OF MODERN ROME

Making the Rounds of the Peleban District—Poverty and Laziness. Modern Rome is a very large subject.

Rome is a city of ashes. The people, the dwellers on the ash-heaps, live along the Tiber, on either bank, between the piazza of St. Peter and the Protestant cemetery.

It lacked two hours of vesper, and the sun was setting over the city, and all were full of words and gesture, talk of the last lottery ticket, gossip, political criticism, the new bridge, with shouts and laughs accompanying every subject.

A liberal government has cleared the torso of billets, but the spirit of Pasquino lingers among the people, and no one writes than the citizen who cracked the last joke on King or pope.

Burns on the Face and Neck. In scalds and superficial burns on the face and neck of young children, the application of molasses, directly over the surface, as a continuous dressing, is effected, is an admirable remedy, always handy.

TIPS FROM THE STABLE BOYS

Novel Methods of Ascertaining Which Horses Are Destined to Win. "Do you see that negro?" asked a prominent business man pointing to a brawny black leading a horse up and down the street...

"How many coons you's had ter wuk for you in de past year?" he asked. "Four or five," I replied. "They's all done left, ain't dey?" said he. I admitted that they had.

When he asked me if I knew why, I said no. "Cos dey's all rich, now," he said. "You got a lucky stable it's a private stable, you know—no racing horses, an' you's a lucky man. When you come to de stable in de mornin' dey'd ax de time. Now spose you ax play 10, 50 and 60, an' dey got de 60 by tackin' 'em onto de last fig'ur an' dey ax you wined."

"But that is not horse-racing," I said. "I'll call the negro here, and you can see what he says himself. 'Zack,' when the negro had responded to the call, 'tell this gentleman how you buy pools on the horse race!'"

Zack grinned from ear to ear, and replied: "De ting am done in dis way, sah. I kin read de papers 'nuf so I kin wot to-night what de entries am fo' de races to-morrow, an' den go 'round de barn, an' I name ebbery wheel an' 'blanket an' harness an' stanush in de place after one ob 'em."

"In to-morrow's mornin'," he said, "I buy him a pair of shoes, an' den go 'round de barn, an' I look in at tings, an' mebbe he takes hole 'nuf, an' shakes it to see if it is tight; 'spose de wheel am named 'Balthazar' (he pronounced it 'Baltazar') I buy him straight, den mebbe de boss'll lean agin a stanush, an' dat'll be Gobling' (Gobling, I buys him fo' a place, cos it's de second one Mr. — touched, see! 'Presently he picks up a halter an' says it wants mendin' 'r suthin, an' dat's 'His Grace.' Now I hab two straight an' one fo' place. De fourth one touched is fo' a place an' de fifth is fo' straight again an' den I play de fust, 'till de boss has de lead, an' den I play de fust one straight and de oder one for straight and place bofe, see! An' dat busts up my combine, fo' I knows I wouldn't win a combine den, if I played it. Does I make any money? Well, I has to, cos I wouldn't take any wages, fo' de wuk I break my back, see! To those who refer from de wuk 'fore dat I made ober $20, and I de one pretty well dis week. Dere's another ting, too; if Mr. — swears, I play the plugs—horses data no account—fo' he stabs his toe comin' in de barn, I don't play anything, cos then if I got a winner he'd throw de jockey or stumblin' or do suthin to lose. I'll gib 'fo' a straight 'nuf to-morrow if yo' want it—no! Yahi! Some folks don't want ter get rich, now!"

Didn't Quite Like Smoking Jackets. A young married man of one of our neighboring cities, celebrated his birthday the other day, and in the evening came home burdened with a mysterious package which, he explained to his wife, he had "found just as he stepped off the street car."

Of course it was opened and examined immediately. Wonderful to relate, it contained a smoking jacket. In the twinkling of an eye his coat was off, the jacket was tried on, and, strange to say, fitted like the paper on the wall.

From the corner of her eye the shrewd little wife caught from the reflection in the mirror his pleased, happy smile.

She was a shrewd little wife. It's lovely, and she was turning and smiling at him from every point of vantage.
