He was 36 Yesterday his men were excavating at years old and almost half his life had been passed in the penitentiary. He was Thomas Stewart who, March 16, 1869, was sent there for life for murder. Stewart now, for the first time, swears that he never committed the deed. He was an industrious young fellow of Scotch-Irish parentage and was employed as a clerk in a grocery store. While working there be became infatuated with a woman who used to make purchases of

This woman, Eliza Reilly, was a frail creature, rather pretty. Among other visitors the woman had was Harry Hulbert, alias "Dice," a sailor from Buffalo. He was a burly fellow, harsh in his treatment of her, and they had many quarrels. The second week in January, 1869, Hulbert spent nearly all his time in the woman's room. One evening the noise of a quarrel was heard. The tumult increased, loud voices were heard, then a shot was fired. When the police ran upstairs they found Hulbert dead and Stewart and the woman in the room. The two latter were arrested. Charley Reed, State's Attorney, thought Stewart was the murderer, and so did the police. The latter, never at a loss for a theory, gave it out that Stewart was jealous of gave it out that Stewart was jealous of Hulbert and killed him. The trial lasted only a few days.
