KELLEN'S CATARRH REMEDY
 THE GREAT
Blood Purifier of the World.
 AN ABSOLUTE CURE FOR CATARRH.
 THE most stubborn cases yield readily to it and have not failed for a single case where directions are followed. Its success has been remarkable and its cures wonderful. It is the most successful preparation in the market for CATARRH and the only one that cures an Absolute, Positive Cure. It is only a blessing to mankind. A Trial is all that is asked for it. Once used, it is always recommended. Send for testimonials of actual cures.

MALARIA.
 A POSITIVE CURE IS ASSURED.
 One bottle is generally sufficient for a cure. Stop taking Quinine. A trial only is asked for Kellen's CATARRH REMEDY. It is a SPECIFIC for all diseases arising from malarial infection and drives all eruptions from the skin. For Syphilis (its complaints) it is superior to any preparation in the market. One bottle will cure all the following complaints and a continued use will positively cure. Save doctor bills and try it.

THE RUSSIAN RHEUMATISM CURE
 DOES THE BUSINESS.
 Thousands have tried it and found relief. There is abundant testimony to this point, positive and unqualified, which should convince the most skeptical. If you suffer with Rheumatism, send for a sample which tells what has been done for others. It is sent free. To be cured costs only $2.50, for one box is sufficient for the worst case.

IT HAS NEVER FAILED
 J. C. McAllister, for many years with Hood, Brothers & Co., now with Wood, Brown & Co., Philadelphia, says: "I suffered from Rheumatism so severely that I could hardly walk. When at times unable to turn my head, I tried the Russian Rheumatism Cure. In a few days I was completely cured."
 Descriptive pamphlet, with testimonials, free. Price $2.50. If registered, 10c more.

THE COST OF CRIME.

MAGNITUDE OF THE BURDEN THE NATION HAS TO CARRY.
 Some Comparative Statistics—The National Debt and the Estimated Value of Vice—Additional Data—A Few Words to the Wise.
 No doubt there are many who think that interest in the care of the criminal and the unfortunate is an idle sentiment, more creditable to the heart than to the head of him who feels it, or at least that this is a matter with which men in ordinary life have no concern. The growth of a spirit of indifference to the whole subject is promoted by our system of local self-government and divided jurisdiction. If the budgets for the support of institutions devoted to the care of these classes could be consolidated, and the actual amount of the drain upon the people of the country which they involve were known, popular interest in them would receive a sudden impulse. It is pitiable to think that human nature is so gross that financial considerations have more weight with us than the universal language, intelligible to everybody, we will try to give our readers some idea of the magnitude of the burden which the nation has to carry, by reducing it to a money standard.

SOME STARTLING FIGURES.
 Four hundred and fifty thousand insane, idiotic, deaf, blind, pauper or criminal inhabitants of the United States cost, for their annual maintenance, probably not less on the average, than $175 each, directly or indirectly, or let us say $75,000,000 in the aggregate. Seventy-five million dollars is a per capita tax of $1.50 on every man, woman and child in America, which we pay almost without our knowledge. At 3 per cent. it is the interest on $2,500,000,000. And what is $2,500,000,000? When the census of 1880 was taken the national debt of the United States was $2,120,414,370. The investment in the debt did not equal the permanent investment in misfortune and crime represented in the returns of the defective, dependent and delinquent classes.

The total permanent investments by the railroad corporations, including construction, equipment, lands, stocks, bonds, telegraph lines, etc., were $2,124,445,808. Our investment in crime and misfortune was about half of that in railroads. The amount invested in railroads is about equivalent to the valuation of the yearly products of manufacturers, which was reported at $3,300,570,101. Were one-half of all the moneys received by manufacturers in any single year to be set apart as a special fund for the care of the criminal and the unfortunate, and invested at 3 per cent., the whole of the interest received would be absorbed. The value of farm products is not quite half that of manufactured articles; it is $2,447,538,625. The whole of the farm products of the United States for one year would not be more than sufficient for the creation of the fund suggested.

ADDITIONAL DATA.
 The assessed valuation of the state of New York in 1889 was $2,651,040,000, or no greater than the amount of capital required for the care of our unfortunate and criminals. The assessed value of the six New England states was $2,652,000,000. All of New England, with her cities, her mills and her banks, would not be more than enough to appropriate to this special purpose, if the capitalization of this expenditure were a necessity. And yet the men who see these relations and dreamers while those who shut their eyes to them are not. The world seems and applauds him who shows it how to add to its gains by increased receipts from agriculture or the mechanic arts, or by diminished charges for doing the business. But it has no word of commendation and no hand of help for the man who points out that a further element must be taken into the calculation before the balance is struck between gain and losses, that the stoppage of the leak occasioned by the growth of classes of the population who are, to a large extent, incapable of self-support might prove to be a fresh source of income. Such reasoning is too remote and circuitous; it is visionary, and with that word it is dismissed. But why should students pore over tables of figures on every other subject, and neglect this, which lies so much nearer to the life of humanity? Is it nothing, to seek to improve the efficiency and economy of a necessary but painful service to labor for the mitigation of suffering to assuage where we cannot cure and to hunt for means of preventing the spread of the contagion of crime—moral and physical.

The Stock Business Out West.
 "What do you think of the future of the western stock business?"
 "In the course of time the business as it is at present conducted has got to cease. I regard the present system as merely the beginning. In different sections the business will take entirely different shapes. Where the land is fitted for agriculture the cowmen will become dispossessed in the natural course of things by graziers. In the Bad Lands grazing will continue, but in the course of time the great ranches will break up, because small ranches fenced in, with 200 or 300 cattle, can be managed more economically. At present the branding iron and the cowboy are the fences, but they must go. I believe that the present, including the largest part of Montana and Wyoming and the western strip of Dakota, will bear the same relations to this country that Hungary does to Europe. Throughout that region a granger cannot subsist except on irrigated lands along the river, and to permit these settlements will turn the entire country away from the rivers into a desert. But the cry in the east against the cattle kings is just as nonsensical as the western cry against the gold bugs. I can only speak from what I have seen; but where I am there is no fencing in or jumping the public domain. The cowmen are simply pioneers who dare go into a wilder country and face greater dangers from the Indians than any other class. They pave the way of civilization, and in the region where I am located there is no objection to settlers following in their wake."—Interview with Theodore Roosevelt.

Sarah Bernhardt's Triumph at Rio.
 The Rio journals describe the Sarah Bernhardt first performance in "Fédora" as surpassing anything ever witnessed in that city. The average price of seats was $3. The elite of the Brazilian capital thronged the vast theatre of San Pedro d'Alcantara and numbers were unable to gain admission. A detachment of military had to be placed at the doors of the theatre to keep back the throngs that gathered around the building. Sarah, inspired by the enthusiasm she had created, surpassed all her former efforts. She was called, recalled, and acclaimed by the entire assembly, and the emperor Dom Pedro, who with his family attended the performance, went forward and congratulated the great artist in person.

"CARP'S" PICTURE OF BUTLER.

A Queer Looking Old Fellow—His Physiognomy—Eccentric Dress.
 I saw Ben Butler in the Capitol today. What a queer old fellow he is. He is about five feet ten inches tall and he weighs 275 pounds. He waddles about like an old woman, and the skirts of his black coat fly out from his fat form so as to strengthen this illusion. He has a very large neck and his chin is a double cone, reminding you somewhat of a frog. He has a big head with a forehead high and broad. Below this his eyes with fat lids peep out through narrow slits of openings, and the trouble about them is that you can't tell whether they are looking at you or not.

Ben Butler's face is very full and his complexion is fair. He has a clean look about him, an evidently taken a bath every morning. He has a big mouth, and over it there is a little, fine-haired mustache, which has now grown gray. It is merely the shadow of a mustache and looks like a streak of silver paint across the white and red of Butler's face. The top of Butler's head is bald, but he has a fringe of fine iron-gray hair hanging down upon his neck. He dresses eccentrically, and it has always seemed to me that he courts notoriety by means of his dress. He wears a universal language, intelligible to everybody, we will try to give our readers some idea of the magnitude of the burden which the nation has to carry, by reducing it to a money standard.

Relics of the Great Tragedy.
 I saw the other day two of the most curious and interesting relics of the greatest tragedy in American history. They are the pistol with which John Wilkes Booth shot President Lincoln and the dagger he held in his hand when he fled from the box to the steps of the theatre, crying, "So sempiterna!" These relics are preserved in a bureau of one of the great departments of the government, and with them is the bullet that struck Mr. Lincoln down. The pistol is the most interesting of the lot. It is one of the kind known as the Derringer, made in Philadelphia, which was very famous all through the south and southwest thirty years ago.

The one in question is of beautiful workmanship. Its barrel is only two inches in length, and the bullet weighs about a quarter of an ounce. The entire length of the weapon is but four inches. Its mounting is of silver, and the lock is one of the finest and most perfect pieces of workmanship I have ever seen. Even in the case of revolvers, which were very expensive and elaborate. The bullet is much battered, and was evidently driven into the muzzle (for the pistol is a muzzle loader) by the use of a mallet and iron loading rod. Considering the heavy charge of powder under the bullet, before it was fired, the latter must have been only half an inch from the muzzle, and could easily have been touched with one's little finger inserted into the barrel. The marks of the rifling in the barrel are clearly visible on the bullet, which was very much flattened from striking the skull. Altogether, a more interesting and ghastly relic I have never seen. While handling the pistol I looked at the end of the breach. I found there a receptacle for percussion caps, which had evidently been overlooked, and upon opening it I found a solitary cap, which Booth had evidently put there himself, intending, if by any chance the one on the tube of the pistol exploded without firing it, to have another ready to his hand.—Washington Herald.

Matt Carpenter's Last Plea.
 A few days before his death a poor girl, daughter of a wounded and disabled soldier, the stay and help of the family through a humble position she held in one of the departments, learning that there was danger of her removal, sought this man's dying bed with her anxious story, knowing how many he had helped in similar circumstances. With no intimation of impatience from his sick pillow he gave a listening ear to the poor girl's recital of her father's disfigurement, the service of his country, of the children looking to her for the eldest, for each addition to his pension as might keep the little ones at school and give them all the comforts of a modest home. From his generous heart he summoned strength, left that dying bed, rode to the department, and made a plea which secured a reconsideration of the order for his removal. Before the week was over all his services on earth were ended. He had gone to his reward with this, the last plea of his life, warm upon his lips.—John R. French.

One Bright Morning in December.
 "That reminds me," said the war correspondent, "of an occurrence at Nashville that gave Stanley great pleasure. After the battle of Franklin, which was fought Nov. 30, 1864, Gen. Hood invested Nashville, much as Sherman had, many months previous, invested Atlanta. That is to say, the lines of investments were semi-circular and parallel, the distance between them being from one to three miles, according to the conformation of the ground."
 "One bright morning in December, before the days of fog and ice, a cavalcade of Confederate officers, in gay uniforms and accompanied by a band, rode jauntily out in front of the intrenchments along the Granny White pike, and, taking a conspicuous position overlooking the valley between the two lines, were apparently enjoying themselves. The band meanwhile playing, 'Who's Been Here Since I've Been Gone?' They made a splendid target, and the temptation was too strong for an officer of the Sixth Ohio battery. Carefully training a section of his guns on the picknickers, he gave the order to fire. Boom! boom! When the reverberations died away and the smoke lifted the musk had ceased, and the Confederate officers, officers, and musicians could be seen, swarming in all directions for cover. The pale smoke lazily rising from the exploded shells on the exact spot where they had been jabbering but a few moments before told the story.—Inter-Ocean "Curbstone Crayons."

Active Principle of Cod Liver Oil.
 The active principle of cod liver oil, of which it forms from 15 to 20 per cent., has been obtained by Dr. Lafarge, of Paris, and is said to have given excellent results when used in place of the crude oil. The substance is called morrhin, and contains twelve times as much iodine, bromine and phosphorus as the original oil, with none of the fat.—Arkansas Traveler.

Tuberculosis and typhoid fever are the predominant diseases and causes of death in the French army.
