FARM NOTES.

TRANSPLANTED TREES. -So much depends upon the season, that under the fostering care of the most expert gardener many trees no matter how well planted, refuse to grow if the after treatment be neglected. One of the most necessary attentions during a prolonged drought is the thoroughly tested practice of summer mulching. Some maintain that frequent stirring of the soil will answer a better purpose, by not attracting the insects, and at the same time create 'a tendency to moisture. It is unwise to place a large mass of material over the ground under a tree, as it soon decays and causes the soll to become sour and generates different forms of fungi. What is needed is a light covering of some loose substance that will impart a cool, healthy shade and at the same time not prevent a circulation of fresh air over the surface of the soil. Although the insects, such as beetles that harbor under a mulch are not usually of a destructive character, yet their presence denotes an unhealthy condition of the place, so that the covering should occassionally be removed and the earth receive a stirring.

In the case of very valuable lawn trees which appear to be struggling for life during a dry spell of weather, it is well to wrap their bodies loosely with some tough paper, which while admitting the air freely affords a pleasant shade. In desperate cases, wrapping the trunks of trees with wet sphagnum moss will frequently preserve their Deep holes made with a crowlives. bar in the immediate vicinity of the roots, afford access of water direct to these important organs, and a thorough syringing over the foliage every evening is also very useful in sustaining life. One of the most serious faults with planters consists in allowing their trees to blow about, and thus detach the young roots from the soil. More losses occur from this case than many are aware of. It is so easy to stake out trees and fasten them securely that the oversight is excusable. In tying however, matting should always be placed between the stake and bark to prevent rubbing.

OLD AND NEW WHEAT .- Farmers are generally surprised on selling wheat early in the fall to find it brings one, two or more cents less per bushel than grain of the same quality of last year's crop. The reason is that the old wheat has seasoned. It has dried out all superfluous moisture and will not shrink any more in weight. New wheat not only loses somewhat by drying out, but it more apt to heat when stored in large quantities, Heavy losses often occur from wheat and other newly threshed grains heating in elevators. In most large mills old and new wheats are run together so that the former may absorb part of the extra moisture, and thus prevent heating.

MILK AS FOOD .- The highly nutritive qualities of milk is less generally appreciated than it deserves. Its liquid character -gives many the impression

On the contrary, he stood at her side, one arm around her waist, trying to guess when to turn the music for her, and invariably turning too soon, just when she was in the middle of an adagio or sforzenda or appoggiatura, and finally, as she discovered that he didn't know one note from ame, I dislike any place where birds go another, she had to nod her head when around raw." the end of a page was reached. Men are sometimes pretty green, but they know enough not to assert any great degree of authority during the first half of the honeymoon, or to intimate that she cannot play on the plano as well as Rubinstein."

A Case Not Beyond Help.

Dr. M. H. Hinsdale, Kewane, Ill., advises us of a remarkable cure of Consumption. He says : "A neighbor's wife was attacked with violent lung disease, and pronounced beyond help from Quick Consumption. As a last resort the family was persuaded to try DR. WM. HALL'S BAL-SAM FOR THE LUNGS. To the astonishment of all, by the time she had used one half dozen bottles she was about the house doing her own work. I saw her at her worst, and had no idea she could recover."

It is best to clean out the granaries before storing grain every season, in order to prevent weevil.
