A GRAVEYARD UNDER WATER. How the Missouri Plowed Through and

Covered Up a City of the Dead. OMAHA, Aug. 1 .- The approaching completion of the new Union Pacific bridge calls to mind the fact that the turbid waters of the Missouri are gleefully flowing over nearly two hundred graves, unknown, unmarked, and unhonored. Resting peacefully in the sand, the bones are gradually crumbling into dust, and unless Gabriel's trumpet is blown unusually loud at Omaha there they will remain forever. Two hundred graves at the bed of a great river is unusual, but 200 graves of unknown men, all dying of the same disease, is a circum-stance almost unparalled. Nature is re-sponsible for their being under fifty feet of water, and the art of bridge building is the cause of their being there at all.

In 1869 the first bridge across the Missouri, between Council Bluffs and Omaha, was begun. At that time Omaha had a population of 4,000 one day, 7,000 the next, or vice versa. It was the half-way house of the continent-a sort of one-day-to-lookaround-in place. Men on their way to the Pacific coast who had, by some of the multifarious ways of spending money, ex-hausted their capital, stopped in Omaha to replenish. In the vernacular of the time, they were after "grub stakes."

Many of them came from good families in the east, but Brown, Smith, or Jones were as good names as were De Vere or Howard, and less likely to cause trouble in the future. Labor, skilled and unskilled, was at a premium, and in no place were wages so high as in the caisons of the Union Pacific bridge under the bed of the Missouri river. People who had been in Omaha any length of time had some hesitation about working in the caisons. They had seen men descend the ladder in the full bloom of health, and had been scarcely able to recognize them as they came up after a few hours' labor, with their backs in the form of a tightly strung bow, their limbs partially paralyzed, and their pulses throbbing at the rate of 100 a minute. Big pay afforded no inducement to them to subect their mortal frames to the pressure of several atmospheres in order to fall down in a faint, with blood streaming from their noses and ears, and be carried away to die. Strangers, however-and nearly every one in Omaha was a stranger -had not received such object essons. They had never heard of the dread calsson disease, and the subterranean work had no terrors for them. The engineers in charge of the work did not conceal the danger that they were undergoing, but they laughed at it.

Enter Smith, Jones or Robinson. He is taken into a receiving vault, where the pressure of the air is gradually increased till it equals that of the atmosphere in the sepulphire where the work is done. The uncomfortable feeling gradually wears away, and he works with pick and shovel for an hour, perhaps, without feeling any ill effects. Suddenly his spinal cord seems to. snap and his head droops until it is nearly on a level with his loins. His blood, feeling like moulten iron, courses through his veins with meteoric swiftness, and his skull seems too small to contain his brain. He is removed from the sepulchre and taken to the hospital. If he recovers he is a cripple for life. If not, he is buried in the sand on the sloping bank of the river, and a shingle marked Jones, Smith or Robinson, as the case may be, is stuck at the head of the grave. A portion of the machinery of the bridge has given out. That is all Lives are cheap, and other pistons and levers take the place. It was the intention of the Union Pacifie most in Sight of the Detectives.

BARNIA, Ont., Aug. 1.-Boodler McGarigle of Chicago landed here yesterday morning from the schooner Ed Blake. The Blake and Marsh were in the same tow, and while in American waters the tug Oriole, with Chicago detectives on board, steamed up to the Marsh, apparently with the intention of having them drop the Blake's tow line. After a short conversa-tion the Blake's tow line was let go, but at the same instant a yawl left the schooner with McGarigle and quickly rowed for the Canada side, landing at Point Edward.

McGarigle at once drove to Courtright, twelve miles down the river, ostensibly to catch a boat. He was, however, driven back, and is now here. It is believed that he is nervous over his safety in Canada, as he keeps away from the river, apparently fearing attempts at kidnapping.

CHICAGO, Aug., 1.--Now that the con-victed boodler McGarigle has safely reached Canadian shores, speculation has turned to the question of how, if at all, his return may be brought about. His extradition on the charge on which he was convicted is, of course, out of the question. It has been suggested, however, that out of some of his "crooked" work on various county bills, estimates, &c., a case of forgery might be made. This would bring the matter under the provision of the treaty. States Attorney Grinnell was un able to say to-day whether the matter would bear that construction or not, but thought the point well worth looking into. "Another question which has been asked me," continued he, "also suggested a rather important train of thought. It may turn out upon investigation that there is more involved in McGarigle's supposed escape by the schooner Blake than a mere question of the extradition treaty. The Blake was owned in part by a Canadian and in part by an American citizen. The schooner itself was plying between two friendly countries, and it striks me that in such an outrageous breach of the comity of nations the Federal government might very well take a hand. I am not up in international or admiralty law well enough to express a positive opinion, but it's a good question for Sheriff Matson and his lawyers to settle."

It is said that the sheriff has asked Gov. Oglesby to communicate with the authorities at Washington and see if they will not take some action toward securing the return of the escaped convict. Despatches from Port Edward say Mc-

Garigie looks bronzed after his trip on the lakes. He is apparently nervous as to his safety here, but the chief of police says he Huston-Julian, Friday, has no authority to arrest him. The detectives have arranged for communication all night between Port Edward and Port Huron, in the hopes of being able to get him over the river, but McGarigle keeps away from the river, and has been walking about some of the back streets. About 7 o'clock he hunted up a dry goods merchant to purchase a new hat. He is fairly well dressed.
