SHADE IN PASTURES.-We have heard of farmers, (we hope they are few) that will not have a shade tree in their pastures, because as they say in hot days the cows will lie in the shade when they should be eating. If there is one thing that the human farmer should attend to more than another, it is the comfort of the animals under his care. We should as soon think of having a pasture without water as without shade, and if we lived where trees did not grow or only grew with great difficulty, one of the first things we should do, would be to provide a means for shelter from the rays of a hot midsummer sun. Even In the case of milch cows, if they do spend a portion of their time in the protection of this shelter instead of grazing, we should expect better returns than if exposed to the heat and the continued worry of flies. If no trees exist, make a rough shelter by means of crotches, poles and boards in a manner to form a shade. There is no good reason why animals should not be allowed opportunity for comfort, as well as their masters, whom they patiently serve, and of which they are most assuredly deserving.

SELECTING A COW .- A model useand of a mild expression; the neck is thin and long; the ears are thin, and covered within with a deep yellow skin; the forequarters are light and thin, and a wedge, increasing in size to the rear; hot oven for one hour. the legs are thin, with fine bone; the belly is large and deep, with great capacity for food; the back is broad and straight, and the ribs are well rounded toward the rear; the bones of the rump are wide apart; the tail is long and thin, the thighs are thin and are set widely apart; the udder is large and full, especially behind; the teats are of good size, and set far apart upon a broad, level udder, and the milk-vein, so-called, which is the large vein leading from the udder and passing into the abdomen, and which is an indication of the amount of blood circulating through the milk glands, and contributing to the milk secretion, should be full and tortuous in its short course, A fine horn, a deep, yellow skin, and a general elegance of form, without any heaviness or beefiness in any part, are also important indications of good quality in a cow for the dairy.

IT is said that the relative cost of raising a pound of pork and a pound of chicken is as three is to four; that is, if a pound of pork costs six cents, a pound of chicken will cost eight. But while the cost of production is so nearly alike, the price realized is about in the ratio of one to three, or, in other words, when pork sells at six cents a pound, chickens will bring eighteen cents a pound. Less "hog and hominy" and more roast chicken for us.

It is said that fowls supplied with supposed to lead to feather pulling, and also furnishes employment to the fowls in the days of enforced idleness. It certainly is worth a trial, especially as it costs next to nothing and is a valuable addition to the diet. PEACH growers should engage experfenced pickers; all should be watched, as an over-ripe peach will spoil all in the basket or crate. An experienced picker knows by the touch or feel whether the peach is too hard to ripen by the time it reaches the consumer, or so soft as to decay on its way to market. Asserting peaches pays; make them into three qualities, firsts and seconds to go to market, and the third to be kept at home for the plgs or to be dried. Pack honestly. Select fine specimens of fruit of all kinds to exhibit at the county fairs, severely thinging to give these a chance.

STRONG BUTTER-There are several reasons for butter becoming strong says, Hoard's Dairyman. Among them are: Using pails and pans that are not thoroughly cleaned from stale milk; setting the stale milk in badly ventilated cellars or milk-houses; keeping the milk too long, until it gets very sour; keeping the cream too long; churning too slowly, or in an unclean churn; not taking all the buttermilk out of the butter; keeping the butter in a warm, badly aired or moldy place; these all cause the butter to become strong, which is the effect of decomposition in it. The food or water of the cow will also cause the trouble.

THE expensive tools necessary to successful farming soon wear out unless well taken care of. A little care in housing tools when not in use will result in many dollars saved. During the season of use, when housing is hardly practicable, whenever work ceases for a day, a canvas cover to throw over a self-binder or thrashing machine will pay for its cost many times over.

IT may seem a small matter to mention but eggs will sell better in almost any market if those of the same color are placed together. Those who breed one variety have no trouble in this particular; but where one keeps a variety of breeds it is well to put the dark eggs in one basket, the light in another, and perhaps those of a medium shade in still another. Some prefer light eggs and some dark ones, and as long as purchasers have a preference, producers do well to furnish what is wanted.

EVEN the most enlightened Mexican farmers still persist in using oxen of one color in the morning and oxen of another color in the afternoon. They don't know why they do this, but they know that it must be the right thing to do, because their fore-fathers did it,

When dry fill the cans. Then place on stove to boil one pound sugar and one cupful of water to every quart of grapes. When boiling fill up the cans with the hot liquid. Boil fifteen minutes longer and pour over the fruit in glass jars.

CORN CAKES .- Cut tender, sweet corn, that has been boiled, from the cob; to each cupful allow an egg and teaspoonful of milk or cream. Beat the eggs until light, add the corn and milk and thicken with just enough flour to hold the ingredients together; season and cook upon a griddle the same as batter cakes. A FEW forms for use in hanging up clothes may be purchased at any hardware store for five or ten cents each, and will keep a garment presentable a great deal longer than when it is hung upon a nail or hook. An easy method of preserving cream for several weeks, or even months, is to dissolve in water an equal weight of white sugar with the cream to be preserved, using only just enough water to melt the sugar, and make a rich syrup. FACETIÆ.

THE RED MAN'S WIT .- Sedate as is the Indian's ordinary demeanor, he sometimes has a sense of humor which is not unlike that of the Scotch in its grimness. Red Jacket, the famous orator of the Senecas, had this grim humor, which he expressed in pithy, brief sentences.

Speaking once of an Indian chief, a weak, easy-going man, whose gluttonous habits had secured for him the name of Hot Bread, the orator said "Big man here," laying his left hand on his stomach, "but very small man here," bringing his right hand to his forehead.

An Indian, being on trial for stealing a few silver spoons, Red Jacket appeared before the white man's court to beg the surrender of the prisoner to the Indians, who would try him conviction of burglary, punished him by a sentence which Red Jacket thought unnecessarily severe.

After the adjournment, the orator, standing amid a group of lawyers, expressed his dissatisfaction with the white man's justice. Looking at a sign on a printing office, whereon were he painted figures of Liberty and Justice, he asked, pointing to one: "What him call?"

"Liberty." answered a lawyer. "Ugh! What bim call?" pointing to the other. "Justice," replied another lawyer.

"Where him live now?" asked the chief, with a sarcastic curl of the lips.

WHY HE WEPT .- Among the crowd present at the panoramic battle of Gettysburg the other evening was a boy about 15 years of age. He had been gazing around him for about fifteen minutes when he began to weep. The fact was noticed, and directly a gentleman said:
