HUNTED TO HIS DEATH.

An English M. F. Fleeing Before an Irate Stepmother.

LONDON, Sept. 19.—Colonel Hughes-Hallett has succeeded in eluding the pursuit of his stepmother, Captain Selwyn, and has returned to London.

Colonel Hughes-Hallett is a prominent society man and a member of several military clubs, as well as one of the best sports of the house of commons.

Major Schomberg had a claim against the government, which was never decided, and although he would talk for hours on the subject, no one was able to understand clearly whether he or the government was at fault.

She is a rich brunette, with jet black hair and eyes and complexion of creamy white. She was always noted for her exquisite throat and arms, and her portraits were painted by some of the most prominent artists of the past decade.

On the occasion of the reception given by George W. Childs to the foreign commissioners on the night previous to the opening of the great exhibition, Miss Schomberg was almost idolized by the unfortunate visitors who could not speak English.

On the occasion of the reception given by George W. Childs to the foreign commissioners on the night previous to the opening of the great exhibition, Miss Schomberg was almost idolized by the unfortunate visitors who could not speak English.

Two years ago Emily Schomberg was regarded as a marvel, and was in fact the feminine Crichton of her day. She could speak every known European language, and was a fine singer, a graceful dancer, and an accomplished amateur actress.

On the occasion of the reception given by George W. Childs to the foreign commissioners on the night previous to the opening of the great exhibition, Miss Schomberg was almost idolized by the unfortunate visitors who could not speak English.

Mrs. Hughes-Hallett is a very proud and spirited woman, and will undoubtedly endeavor to punish her husband severely for the disgrace he has brought upon her.
