How One Hundred Beautiful Young Ladies Are Keeping Themselves in Condition—Going Through a Regular Course in a Gymnasium—A Pretty Sight.

In a spacious room up near the roof of the Methodist Church Block, says the Chicago Herall, one hundred young ladies assemble every Friday evening for the object of obtaining the grace and beauty that come of health and strength. Now, this is a singular purpose for young ladies to aim at, isn't it! Naturally enough, young ladies like grace and beauty, but they like them to be heritages, not the acquirements from effort. Young ladies have less appreciation of the causes, health and strength, than they have of the effect, grace and beauty. Yet here are one hundred of them who are trying to be beautiful, and, after a comprehensive survey of the fair battal-ion, it must be conceded that the majority of them have succeeded. One can imagine one hundred young ladies gathering of an evening for almost any other purpose than exercise. Youthful femininity is gregarious, but for purposes of amusement, not for purposes of improvement. They gather to work embroidery and to drink tea, to gossip and to manicure each other's finger nails, but for them to assemble to obtain muscular development and its desirable results is quite extraordinary in these days of tight lacing and kindred evils.

This class of one hundred young women represents a drill corps presided over by Mrs. Rountree, a pupil of Dio Lewis. This instructress has other pupils many of them, some in private classes, some that come to her for single private lessons. The drill corps is the cream of the pupils, however, and their work in light gymnastics is so clever and picturesque that they are in active demand for evening entertainments in halls and churches, and last year filled nearly two hundred engagements in the city and the suburbs. Seeing these one hundred damsels arranged in serried ranks and going through their exercises with light dumb-bells and Indian clubs, one naturally wondered why they were in search of grace and beauty when they had already such large stocks of those modities on hand. A hundred prettier young women it would be hard to find even in Chicago. This was commented on by the Herald representative, who was admitted to the rites and ceremonies usually sacred from masculine gaze, and the instructress answered: "Why should they not be handsome? They are healthy, and health is the foundation of beauty." The members of the corps were dressed simply and tastefully. The outer garments consisted of a blouse waist of blue flannel, having loose sleeves, and a skirt of the same material made of a length to reach the top of the boots. The blouses had sailor collars and were trimmed with gold braid. This is a becoming dress for a pretty girl, and just as attractive when she is swinging clubs as if she were pretending to be yachting or rowing. The process of the lesson is not easy to describe. Breathing exercises begin it. Then follow calisthenics, graceful in the movements and statuesque in the postures. Then come maneuvers with the dumb-bells and clubs, infinitely more attractive than the attained exhibitions of professional fancy club-swingers. Then there are exercises with wands, bean-bags, rings and grips, The work is all done with a musical accompaniment, the pianist playing a polka, a waltz or a march, according to the style and rapidity of the motions. The young women entered into the exercises with much heartiness and seemed to enjoy the lesson

"Who are these young women?" was asked of the teacher. "Whence do they come, and to what classes of society do they belong!" "The fiajority of this drill corps," was the reply, "is made up of sensible young ployed at various vocations. There are clerks, type-writers, saleswomen, schoolteachers, music-teachers and many other classes of working women, who, finding their health failing ander confining employment, came to me to have their constitutions built up. Those two girls there came to me as patients. They were invalids simply from lack of proper physical exercise. They have been here a year, and their health is manifested by their appearance. You will scarcely find anywhere two heartier and healthler young women. Yet both are employed all day, and the only fresh air they get is in walking to and from the offices where they work.'

"Are all your pupils from the classes of working women?"

*No, indeed; but my prize pupils, my exhibition corps, are of these classes. Are they not bright, handsome, intelligent girls?" The reporter was going to say he should smile, but refrained, remembering that he belonged to the Society for the Prevention

"I have," continued the preceptress, classes in fashionable circles also. I go to the houses and give them lessons, or, sometimes the class meets here, which is prefer fashionable dress have done their part to wreck their consti-tutions. Some of these girls are absolutely worthless. The modern style of education for girls gives attention teholly to accom-plishments and not at all to health. The consequence is that after a few seasons of society's pleasures, late hours, tight lacing, and entire is k of exercise, these girls are like so many well-dressed corpses; they are not much better. When I first take these young women in hand, i do not give these young women in hand, I do not give them very much exercise. I have to take gentle means of promoting circulation and muscular action I do this, in cases of extreme lack of energy, by a percussive treatment (it is not massage), which is very of fective in attaining the desired result.

Taxas is glory in winning from the strong and dividing with the weak.

Then the pupils or patients, whichever you may call them, are given gentle exercises, which are increased with their capacity." "Do you not think that there is a tendency on the part of womankind to give more attention to physical culture than hitherto?" asked the reporter.

"No," replied the teacher, "I can't say that I think so. I have a dreadful time with some of the girls who come to me to get them to leave off corsets, even while they exercise. Women should not depend upon artificial support for their bodies. It is well enough for them to wear corsets, but not all the time, so as to depend on them. Sickness among women is creating a reform in the corset habit. The evil of tight lacing is correcting itself. We have to take extraneous means to interest women in physical culture. To do so we put them in pretty dresses. We have some very graceful and charming fancy costumes for an exhibition drill. Sometimes we use Grecian costumes, or Roman or Japanese. A row of Japanese girls going through exercises with clubs and bells is better than a comic opera, and certainly more useful. We have a great variety of dresses, the only necessity is that they must be loose and flowing to be adapted to exercise." "Is there a regular course of gymnastics requisite to the physical development of Women ?"

"According to Dio Lewis' system, which we follow, there is a three years' course, prefaced by breathing exercises and free gymnastics, no less than fifteen hundred varieties. We have a musical accompani ment, because, as Dr. Lewis used to say, 'You can coax out more muscle than you can drive.' One must make physical culture entertaining and fashionable. This drill corps has been of gradual formation, but it was organized with a few pupils. For exhibitions we send a corps of any number from twenty-five to a hundred. The fashionable society folks do not care to be known in connection with this kind of work, but I have several classes of children and young girls that meet at private houses of the social elect. The ages of my girls in the drill corps range from seventeen to twenty-five years. Some of them came to me scrawny, flat-chested creatures, and after a year or two the improvement in them is wonderful. Of course, beauty of face and form depends on digestion and circulation, and judicious exercise is the only way to obtain these."

"Do you use heavy clubs and bells in any cases?"

"Never. I use three-pound clubs and one-pound bells. They are heavy enough. Sullivan uses one-pound bells for practice, and when any of my girls undertake to think that they want heavy-weights I tell them that they are using just the weights that the great pugilist uses. I am not try-ing to make draft horses of the girls, but graceful and well-developed women. Women in different employment need different kinds of exercise. The type-writer who is at her desk eight hours a day is not to be treated in the manner to be used with the society woman. They all have exercises to practice at home, but they most enjoy the general meetings here on Fridays. It is the intention to establish a gymnasium for women. Subscriptions for the purpose have already been taken, and the work is one that attracts the support and co-operation of all thinking people, men or women."

LINCOLN'S STATUE.

Erected by Eli Bates, in Lincoln Park, Chicago—A Noble Tributeto a Noble Man. On Saturday, October 22, 1887, was unvailed the Lincoln monument erected by the munificence of Eli Bates, Esq., of Chicago, in Lincoln Park, of this city. The the park. Mr. Bates bequeathed $40,000 for this purpose. The trustees gave the commission to Augustus St. Gaudens, of New Printing, office rent, postis the southern entrance of York. The statue is said to excel any former one of the martyr-President. An ellipse of granite, sixty feet long in the longest diameter, has a place for spreading,

The statue rests on a cube of granite.

The bronze figure of Lingola is eleven and a half feet high, and stands detached from a chair of state. The left leg is advanced.

The left hand grasps a lapel of the leg. The left leg is advanced. The body rests chiefly on the right leg. The left hand grasps a lapel of the long frock coat, which is unbuttoned. The right hand is behind the hody with the arm at length. The head inclines a little forward. The figure is clothed in a modern suit of clothes. The sculptor's plan was to represent the Nation's chief as if surrounded by strife of soldiers and politicians, yet calm amid the turmoil. The characteristics of Mr. Lincoln are expressed in this work. The chair of state is classic in shape, and appropriately ornamented with pine cones, oak leaves, palms, and on the back is an eagle, with outstretched wings, in bas-relief. The feet are lion's claws. The statue weighs a ton; the chair and base were cast with it in one piece, by the Herry Bonnard company of New York.

The statue was formally unvailed and presented to the record Satzwales and
