PITTSBURG, July 31 .- Miss Mamie Phillips, the 19-year-old daughter of a highly respectable family residing in Allegheny City, was by many, is really Stanley, coupled with the arrested charged with the theft of $720 in total absence of definite news regarding the money from James Devine, a guest of her explorer and his party. It is now quite a year since Mr. Stanley has been heard of through news of direct communication givparents. Saturday evening Devine reported his loss to the police, but could give no clew whatever. For several days valuable packages of silk dress goods, a piano, a gold watch, suit of parlor furniture, etc., had been delivered at the Phillips residence, and finally letters arrived addressed to Miss Mamie and explained that the gifts were in recognition of her bravery and heroism in rescuing the donor-an aged lady named "Mrs. Collins"-from what would have proven a serious street railway accident, and that she had taken this way of returning thanks for that kindness. Detective Glen unraveled the mystery and called on Miss Phillips, and in the presence of her family accused her of the theft, the purchase of the goods, the writing and posting the Collins letters to herself for the purpose of covering up her crime. Miss Phillips indignantly denied the charge, but finally admitted her guilt and was placed under arrest. Owing to the prominence of the interested parties concerned the affair has created a great sensation.
