HOW TO KILL AND DRESS A FOWL. -To dress a fowl with the least trouble, hang it up by the feet so that it will drop a convenient hight, and attach a wire hook to the under beak of the fowl, to which hang half a brick. Sever the jugular vein with a sharp knife, and proceed to pick, holding the wings with one hand while you pick with the other. Work quickly. Get most of the feathers off the breast side with three or four hand pulls, and change the wings to the other hand held across the breast of the fowl, and with a few pulls get most of the feathers off the back. Grasp one wing at a time, and pull out the long feathers at one stroke. Then finish up the picking entirely before the fowl is taken down. When done, chop off the head. take a sharp knife and cut through the skin around the vent, being careful not to sever the intestine.

That instantly stops the most excruciating pains, allays Inflammation, and cures Congestions, whether of the Lungs, Stomach, Bowels, or other glands or organs, by one application. No matter now violent or excruciating the pain the Rheumatic, Bedridden, Infirm, Crippied, Nervous, Neura'gic, or prostrated with diseases may suffer. Pull gently, and as the intestine comes out insert the forefinger and bring out the intestines rapidly, but do not break them. Get them out up to the gizzard, and break off there by the thumb and forefinger, and your fowl is ready for market. If you wish to make ready to cook, the hole must be slightly enlarged and the gizzard pulled out, cut open, and the inner lining removed, with all gravel, food, etc. A slit must be made in the breast and the crop reremoved, which should be empty when the fowl is killed. Some people remove the lungs, It is not necessary. The heart should be removed and washed, as some clotted blood is usually around it. The operation of preparing a fowl for market can be done by an expert

> The process of making the wood carpet now coming into common use is comparatively simple, although it must be done with exactitude. Carefully adjusted saws strip the lumber into the desired thickness and width, the latter differing according to the work required. The stuff is then subjected to the saws that cut it out in proper shape for inlaying, to form the fabric and figure of the carpet. This must be done with much particularity, as each of the multiform pieces must exactly fit. The arrangement of the pieces and the gluing of them is done by lads, and looks like slow work, but yards are thus woven with fair celerity. Canvas is glued on one side to give strength to the fabric. The carpet is then subjected to sandpaper, and is finally finished with hard oil.
