FARM NOTES.

PICK apples at the right time, assorting them as you pick, and put all the sound ones in bushel boxes. Take these boxes to some central and convenient place for packing in good clean barrels. Make a table say six or eight feet long and three feet wide at one end, and narrowed to eight or ten inches wide at the other. Place boards six inches wide around the top. Have the table high enough so that an apple barrel will just go under the narrow end. Make the other end of the table four inches higher, so that the apples will gently roll to the end toward the barrel. Empty the bushel boxes in this barrel, and you can see all the imperfect fruit, which can be readily picked out and the good fruit placed carefully in the barrel. In this way assorting can be done very rapidly. Proper assorting of fruit has been talked and written about for years, yet many fruit growers will not learn that the practice is money in their pockets. Certainly it does not pay to put a peck of small apples in a barrel of larger ones. They do not measure any more and only lower the price upon the whole product. If possible, select a good dealer in fruit and sell to him. If you can guarantee your fruit, you will have no trouble in selling. I make all my small sound apples into cider, using a power press with a capacity of eighty barrels per day. Adding three pounds of grages to each bushel of apples improves the quality of the cider. Everything is kept sweet and You seem to be excited, Mrs. Jones. clean.

TAMING PRAIRIE SOD .- In all situations which are adapted to the growth of the so-called "tame grasses" they may be made to supplant the wild growth without breaking the prairie sod. The seed of blue grass, timothy, or any variety desired may be sown directly upon the praire sod. The wild growth will protect the new from the face in this house again for at least a sun, winds and beating rains until it week. becomes established. In a few years the cultivated grasses will run out the indigenous ones, making a dense, thrifty sod. If the prairie has been used for pasturing cattle, it is so much the better. A good time for this is in September, before the autumn rains, or early in spring, before the frost is out of the ground. The latter is the time to sow clover.

Many women are prevented by feelings of delicacy from consulting a physician in those disorders arising from functional derangement of her peculiarly delicate organism, and the most serious results are often caused by this neglect. THE GRANGE APPLE .- This new apple was first brought into public notice by the Mullica Hill Grange, of Gloucester County, N. J. At the meeting of the American Pomological Society, held in Boston last September, it was favorably noticed by the Native Fruit Committee. In general appearance and size the fruit resembles the Rhode Island Greening, being large, nearly, round, and slightly flattened at the ends; when fally ripe its color is greenish yellow, with a few red dots, and a blush on the sunny side. Its flesh is fine grained and of a mild, subacid flavor, season from December to March. The trees make a strong. vigorous growth and, with proper care, bear abundant crops annually.

HARVEST LUCK .- Some farmers are the most lucky people in the world. They cut their grain and get it in the barn, though often before the last load is thrown up under the peak a big rain comes on. But how enjoyable a heavy rain must look to the farmer who can see his last load of grain in the barn! To be sure, he has watched the weather, his implements were all repaired, ready for the harvest, and he did nothing but harvest when the time came. He worked his brain as well as his muscles, and that is why he seems to be a very lucky man.

EVERY stalk of corn should be carefully examined in order to select for next year's seed. An examination at this time will show the stalks which have made the more vigorous growth and developed sooner than the others in the field. While the grain and shape of the cob as well as the number of ears on the stalk should be noticed; yet the main object should be to secure seed from the earliest and most vigorous stalks, and this is the proper time to examine.

The curious fact that usual h at produced by friction is absent when the articles are magnetized is just now being discussed by scientists who are seeking an explanation. Very striking examples are described in a late number of a scientific periodical. A workman fastened a couple of powerful magnets to his lathe to hold more securely a piece of metal which he wished to drill and turn. The presence of the magnets kept the metal so cool that no water was needed to keep the drill moist and cool. This unusual circumstance may lead to important mechanical advantages.

In generating steam, experiments under various boilers show 1000 feet of gas to be equal in heating power to from 80 to 133 pounds of different kinds of coal. One pound of coal equals in value 71 feet of natural gas. The latter explodes violently when mixed with 9 to 14 parts of air. When burned with pure oxygen, the flame temperature of the natural gas is estimated at 7100 degrees centigrade. When burned with just enough air to secure perfect combustion, the tem-peratures are estimated at 2333 degrees centigrade for natural gas, and 1700 degrees for Siemens.
