SALT FOR ASPARAGUS BEDS .- "You need not tell me," said an old gardener, "that salt does no good on asparagus. I know better. I have used it for many years and always with good results." "In our own trials," we replied, "we can see no difference in the part of the bed that was dressed with salt and the part that had no salt. One was as good as the other. How do you apply the salt, and when?" "At any time," he replied. "I save all the old brine from the beef and pork barrels and pour it over the bed. You need not be afraid of it. You cannot get enough on to kill the asparagus." Here probably we have the explanation of the wide-spread belief that salt is a special fertilizer for asparagus, while all actual trials seem to prove that it does no good except to kill weeds without hurting the asparagus. The salt used is often in the form of old brine, and this brine contains saltpetre (nitrate of potash), one of the most powerful of all fertilizers, and it also contains a nitrogenous extract from the meat. It is not the salt that makes the asparagus grow so luxuriantly, and assume such a dark color, but the nitrogen. An application of sulphate of ammonia or nitrate of soda has the same effect; and in both cases it is due to the nitrogen they furnish.

WOODLANDS IN AUTUMN.-Timber cut while alive is more durable than if not cut till dead. "Pin oak," for example, if cut while alive and when the bark will peel off, makes a durable rail, but if not cut until it has died, it is worthless except for fire wood. If a close watch is kept on the wood lands, trees about to die can be cut in the fall, the most durable timber be obtained. Trees of declining vigor are the first of their class to lose brightness of foliage. and always they have made little growth during the season. It is not necessary to chop them up until late fall or winter. When it is done, clear up the woodiands, removing everything that will prevent the growth of something better. It will be best to cut many trees when the bark will peel, for while they have so little value that they should not be allowed to cumber the ground, it is worth while to get their highest value.

PRESERVING THE VITALITY OF SEED CORN -After seed corn is dried clear through to the center of the cob, care is still required in keeping it until ready for use. Many leave it hanging in a dry place in which it was cured, which is unobjectionable if always protected from dampness, frost and vermin-the great requisites in keeping the seed properly after it is cured. Corn in traces may well be stripped of its husks and dried on a floor before packing away, to be sure all moisture in the butts is dried out. A well dried ear will snap like a stick when broken. If it is perfectly dry, many good farmers prefer to leave the seed on the ear until about ready to plant, believing that this guards against the sweating process which it passes through when stored in any quantity. If the ears are packed in barrels, avoid using oil c'oth, a gossamer cloak, or any wasalt barrels.

SHEEP IN OLD PASTURES .- New England Farmer declares that sheep in an old, weedy pasture or wood lot will more than pay their way in keeping down the noxious weeds and briars, while nothing equals them for restoring fertility to worn out fields. But they must have something to eat. They cannot live on nothing and enrich the fields at the same time. Put in enough of them and give them a little grain and they will do all that is claimed. This is another illustration of "the golden tread of sheep."

THE cultivation of various farm crops is begining to receive intelligent attention. The idea that corn or potatoes or other crops do not need cultivation because there are no weeds is a mistake, or that in plowing or cultivaing the roots of the crops ought to be broken, and the more that are broken the better, is another mistake,

A FARMER near Lansing Michigan, made a trial, as he states in the Michigan Farmer, of Clawson, Nelvet Chaff and Champion Amber wheats during the past season. About twelve acres were sown. The Champion Amber yielded 214 bushels; the Velvet Chaff yielded 18 bushels, and the Clawson yielded 25% bushels per acre.
