Raise the end farleft in a body, which is mainly attributable to the fact that the soil is ren dered porous by mixing the manure therewith, thus permitting the carbonic acid gas of the atmosphere more readily to penetrate to the roots of the plants. Said gas being an important element in the production of plants, the soil should be well stirred soon after each rain, thus preventing the formation of a crust. The mixing of soil soil with the manure will prevent plants from firing in time of dry weather, thus obviating the usual bad effects of fresh manure when used in a body. In fact, unrotted manure mixed with soil possesses, as I believe, all the advantages of well-rotted, and, being far preferable in procuring an early stand, its use is recommended for the ourposes aforesaid.
