By the recent floods, twenty of the sixty-seven counties in the centennial exposition of 1876 a great success Pennsylvania suffered, and in ten of them the proposed exposition of 1892 could easily be there was loss of life. The relief fund its exhibits, in its usefulness for public education, for the sufferers will reach not less than brethren.

Maj. Powell says that dams must continue to be built, in spite of Conemaugh, for they are necessary. But those who project them must carefully calculate beforehand the amount of pressure from rain or snow fall the walls of a reservoir laving out a reservoir, first a topographical survey should be made, then a hyaverage amount of rain and snow fall over the basin and the amount discharged by streams emptying into it.

Clara Barton writes of the helpful work performed by the Red Cross society. She says that one conclusion has been forced on her through much experience in affording public relief. It is that the relief supplies and money should chairs. When completed it will be the best finnot be intrusted for distribution to local committees. They are intelligent, honest and disposed to do their best, she thinks, yet though they were spotlem as snow, local jealousy would in every case charge them with misappropriating funds.
