There is a new legal phase in the Johnstown disaster. Suit was brought the Pennsylvania railroad company for Johnstown flood. He claims that the railroad officials were negligent and ould have avoided the destruction o the train by obeying the notices that the dam was momentarily expected to break.

He gives this statement in his declaration filed before the court: "I purchased tickets for my wife and three children, aged respectively 2, 5 and 7 years, from Cleveland to Tyrone, Pa. They went via the Cleveland and Pittsburg and the Pennsylvania railroads. On May 21, when the train had reached Conemaugh near Johnstown, the officials of the road got notice of the danger from the flood and anticipated bursting of the dam. The train was held there in the midst of all the danger for six hours. They had the danger, but gave no heed to it.
