rase the cry that this is simply a piece of great question of treasury reform. political clap trap on the part of Governor Pattison and his advisers, and that the special session is part of the political campaign now being waged by the Democratic party, but the fact still remains that Governor Pattison is too well known to the people of Pennsylvania for them to believe that unless he was convinced by a conscientious sense of his duty, and impelled to action by higher motives Recognizing that the best interests of the people lay in this direction, he has not hesitated to act. Knowing the significant character of the evidence which has already been presented and is likely to be brought out, the defenders of the accounting officers of the commonwealth are already beginning to put in the plea of confession and avoidance. They can not help but abmit that there has been gross negligence on the part of these officials, but they are charging that it has been the custom of the accounting officers, in this particular. But the law which has been laid down for the guidance of the Auditor General and State Treasurer is a plain one. It was the duty of these officers to see to it that no couns State funds, failed to report the amount colleced by him quarterly, and to make payment to the Treasurer of the State of all moneys in his hands on this account,

The friends of the State Treasurer are naturally very much incensed that he also has been included in the proclamation of the Governor, but no other consistent course lay open. The same law which applies to the Auditor General, not exceeding $30,000. A delegation of applies to the State Treasurer. If the one was derelict in duty, the other has been so also. Herein lies a little history which dates back to that period in the financial affairs of Pennsylvania when the once powerful Mackey and Quay political affairs. It was found convenient when the Auditor General of the State ery of grain and other commodities to was not willing to be a party to all their schemes to devise legislation which gave to the State Treasurer equal powers with him and so it was that as time went on, the first year to dispose of our surplus terms. But contracts in form for future the State Treasurer came to have full by the Auditor General. These "chickens have come home to roost." It is unfortunate now that the State Treasurer has been clothed with equal power with the Auditor General, for it would be a most convenient way of escape for him to simply claim that he was but the custodian of the funds, and that the Au-
