> The week just closed was the one interesting period of this session of the state legislature says the Patriot. It is a week which will long be remembered in the Republican history of Pennsylvania, for it is the date of the opening of one of the greatest political battles ever fought. The conflict is in its infancy. Senator Quay and his forces are in the lead, but they gained their supremacy in the apportionment fight of Friday by the aid of twenty Democrats.

The Quay people are glad they knocked out the apportionment, yet they are not gloating over their victory. Before them lies a great political battle field arrayed against them is a powerful enemy to be overcome or surrendered to. They realize this and are prepared to line up for the fray.
