The Klondike Death Trap.

Reports from Alaska show that there is already a terrible state of affairs along the routes to the gold fields and it is probable the winter will bring with it some horrible scenes in that remote country. People will starve to death and public sentiment will be shocked by the tales of suffering that will come back to civilization, when communications are restored in the spring. The overland route from Southern Alaska is already blockaded by the mass of adventurers seeking to get to the gold fields. The regular transportation lines are refusing to carry people to the mouth of the Yukon, unless they are amply supplied with provisions, but it is asserted that tramp steamers are taking any passengers who can pay for the passage to St. Michaels. Once there the gold-seekers are in about the same position as if they had landed in New Orleans on the head waters of the Missouri. An arctic winter will soon shut them off from any communication with the rest of the world or possibility of relief should their supplies run out. Every message that now comes from Alaska is a shout of warning to keep away, but the foolhardy are so numerous that death will probably reap a big harvest along the Yukon and in the mountain passes this winter.

Honored Her Husband.

Without any ostentation or ceremony the widow of the late Andrew Gregg Curtin, Pennsylvania's great war governor, has erected a stately shaft to his memory. It is a pleasure to record this act of wifely devotion and to contrast it with the forgetfulness of many of the relatives of the illustrious. One gets impatient over the frequent references to the neglected graves of former statesmen or soldiers, all of whom left relatives. It is true, the nation owes many of them a great debt, but the nation is a sort of incorporeal personality—if such a seeming contradiction be permitted—and is slow to act. Besides it is only in rare and isolated cases that the nation can be expected to step in between the dead and his immediate friends. It always creates an unfavorable impression toward a dead man's living relatives when the newspapers begin to talk about his neglected grave. Surely if one's own relatives forget him the nation's negligence may well be excused.—Altoona Tribune.

Hitting Horses on the Head.

Never hit your horse on the head, as you are not only liable to injure him, but to make him a halter-puller. After you have been left eight or ten miles from home, as a result of this trick you will see the value of this advice, aside from humane reasons.

—There are yet several months of warm weather and Lewins, Bellefonte offers a most excellent chance for one to save several dollars in purchasing of him. All summer lines have been reduced. The counters must be cleared, and the price they have marked the goods at will move them.

SPECIAL FEATURES

The Osborne Columbia

Corn Harvester

Reciprocating feeding jaws reach well ahead of the knife and force the cut. Will not pull corn up by the roots.

Machine is narrow, can drive through between the rows and open up field without running over the standing corn.

Can be successfully operated with two horses.

All levers in easy reach of driver. Perfectly balanced, no side draft, and no weight on horses' necks.

It has two speeds of chains, front pair running fast enough to straighten up all leaning stalks and incline them a little toward the machine before they are cut off, the rear chains running at a lower speed in unison with the butt conveyors.

As the stalks stand on end it always makes a square butted bundle.

The side extension legs on the power' drive wheel prevent it from slipping and give the greatest possible traction power.

Gearing on binder attachment is high above the ground, well protected from dirt.

The binder floor or bottom can be raised or lowered by a lever within easy reach of the driver for kindling long or short corn.

The Columbia Corn Harvester gathers, cuts and binds corn in a vertical position. Weeds, grass or pumpkin vines will not wind about or clog the Columbia Corn Harvester.

Machine can be set to cut a low or extremely high stubble.

Will bind a large or small bundle.
