In working about the reservoir Wes made a misstep and went over the side of the reservoir down seven feet to the hard cement bottom. The physician found no bones broken, but there was evidence of severe internal injuries. Instead of improvements Wes' condition grew worse instead. His sufferings were intense until about six o'clock Saturday evening when he expired. No post mortem examination was held, but it is supposed that the liver or other internal organs were ruptured by the fall and it is surprising that he lingered so many hours in ag-
