REV. DR. TALMAGE.

THE EMINENT DIVINE'S SUNDAY DISCOURSE.

Subject: "A Great Man Fallen"-A Eulogy of the Late Justice Field-One of the Most Notable Characters of Our Times Whose Life is Worthy of Emulation. Text: "Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?"—II Samuel iii., 38.

Here is a plumed catafalque, followed by Here is a plumed catalatique, followed by King David and a funeral oration which he delivers at the tomb. Ceneering Abner, the great, David weeps out the text. More appropriately than when originally uttered we may now utter this resounding lamentation, "Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in ternal?"

Israel?"

It was thirty minutes after six, the exact hour of sunset of the Sabbath day, and while the evening lights were being kindled, that the soul of Stephen J. Field, the lawyer, the judge, the patriot, the statesman, the Christian, ascended. It was sundown in the home on yonder Capitol hill, Washington, as it was sundown on all the surrounding hills, but in both cases the sunset to be followed by a glorious sunrise. Hear the Easter anthems still lingering in air, "The trumpet shall sound, and the

from a minister's home in New England. He knelt with father and mother at morning and evening prayer, learned from maternal lips lessons of piety which lasted him and controlled him amid all the varied and exciting scenes of a lifetime and helped him to die in peace an octogenarian. Blot out from American history the names of those ministers' sons who have done honor to judicial bench and commercial circle and national Legislature and Presidential chair, and you would obliterate many of the grandest chapters of that history. It is no small advantage to have started from a home where God is honored and the subject of a world's emancipation from sin and sorrow is under constant discussion. The Ten Commandments, which are the foundation of all good law-Roman law, German law English law, American law—are the best foundation upon which to build character, and those which the boy, Stephen J. Field, so often heard in the parsonage at Stock-bridge were his guidance when a haif century after, as a gowned justice of the Su-preme Court of the United States, he unrelied his opinions. Bibles, hymn books, catechisms, family prayers, atmosphere sanetified, are good surroundings for boys and girls to start from, and if our laxer ideas of religion and Sabbath days and home training produce as splendid men and women as the much derided Puritanic Sabbath and Puritanie teachings have produced, it will be a matter of congratulation and thanksgiving.

Do not pass by the fact that I have not yet seen emphasized that Stephen J. Field was a minister's son. Notwithstanding was a minister's son. Notwithstanding that there are conspicuous exceptions to the rule—and the exceptions have built up a stereotyped defamation on the subject—statistics plain and undeniable prove that a larger proportion of ministers' sons turn out weil than are to be found in any other genealogical table. Let all the parsonages of all denominations of Christians where children are growing up take the consolation. See the star of hope pointing down to that manger!

to that manger!

Notice also that our departed friend was a member of a royal family. There were no crowns or scepters or thrones in that ancestral line, but the family of the Fields, like the family of the New York Primes, like the family of the Princeton Alexanders, like a score of families that I might mention, if it were best to mention them, were "the children of the king." and had put on them honors brighter than crowns and wielded influence ionger and wider than scepters. That family of Fields traces an honorable lineage back 800 years to Hubertus de la Feld, coadjutor of William the Conqueror. Let us thank God for the Conqueror. Let us thank God for such families, generation after gener-tion on the side of that which is right and good. Four sons of that country minister, known the world over for extraordinary usefulness in their spheres, legal, commercial, literary and theological, names of the Pharaohs and the Cæsars stand for cruelty and oppression and vice.

While parents cannot aspire to have such conscicuous households as the one the name of whose son we now celebrate, all parents may, by fidelity in prayer and holy example have their sons and daugh-ters become kings and queens unto God, to reign forever and ever. But the work has aiready been done, and I could go through this country and find a thousand households which have by the grace of God and blessing upon paternal and maternal excellence become the royal families of America.

Let young men beware lest they by their behavior blot such family records with some misdeed. We can all think of households the names of which meant everything honorable and consecrated for a long while, but by the deed of one son sacri-ficed, disgraced and blasted. Look out ficed, disgraced and blasted. Look out how you rob your consecrated ancestry of the name they handed to you unsulifed! Better as trustee to that name add something worthy. Do something to honor the old homestead, whether a mountain cabin or a city mansion or a country parsonage. Rev. David Dudley Field, though thirty-two years passed upward, is honored today by the Christian life, the service, the death of his son Stephen.

Among the most absorbing books of the Bible is the book of Kings, which again and again illustrates that, though piety is not hereditary, the style of parentage has much to do with the style of descendant.

not hereditary, the style of parentage has much to do with the style of descendant. It declares of King Abijam, "He walked in all the sins of his father which he had done before him," and of King Azarlah, "He did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, according to all that his father Amaziah had done." We owe a debt to those who have gone before in our line as certainly as we have obligations to those who subsequently appear in the household. Not so sacred is your old father's walking staff, which you keep in his memory or the evewhich you keep in his memory or the eye-glasses through which your mother studied the Bible in her old age as the name they hore, the name which you inherited. Keep it bright, I charge you, Keep it suggestive of something elevated in character. Trample not underfoot that which to your father and mother was dearer than life itself. Defend their graves as they defended your cradie. Family coat dearer than life itself. Defend their graves as they defended your cradle. Family coat of arms, escutcheons, ensigns armorial, lion couchant, or lion dormant, or lion rampant, or lion combatant, may attract attention, but better than all heraldic inscription is a family name which means from generation to generation faith in God, self sacrifice, duty performed, a life well lived and a death happily died and a heaven gloriously won! That was the kind of name that Justice Field augmented and adorned and perpetuated—a name honorable at the close of the eighteenth gentury, more honored now at the close of country said he would rather be author of Judge Field's dissenting opinions than to be the author of the Constitution of the be the author of the Constitution of the United States. The tendency is to go with the multitude, to think what others think, to say and do what others do. Sometimes the majority are wrong, and it requires heroes to take the negative, but to do that logically and in good humor requires some elements of make up not often found in judicial dissenters or, indeed in any class of men. There are so not often found in judicial dissenters or, indeed, in any class of men. There are so many people in the world opposed to everything and who display their opposition in rancorous and obnoxious ways that a Judge Field was needed to make the negative respected and genial and right. Minorities under God save the world and save the church. An unthinking and sprecipitate "yes" may be stopped by a righteous and he roic "no." The majorities are not always right. The old gospel hymn declares it:

Numbers are no mark that men will right

Numbers are no mark that men will right

Numbers are no mark that men will right be found;
A few were saved in Noah's ark to many millions drowned.
The Declaration of American Independence was a dissenting opinion. The Free Church of Scotland, under Chalmers and his compeers, was a dissenting movement. The Bible itself, Old Testament and New Testament is a protest against the Testament, is a protest against the theories that would have destroyed the world and is a dissenting as well as a divinely inspired book. The decalogue on Sinai repeated ten times "Thou shalt not." For ages to come will be quoted from lawbooks in court rooms Justice Field's mugnificent dissenting opinions.

Notice that our ascended friend had such a character as assault and peril alone can develop. He had not come to the soft cushions of the Supreme Court bench stepping on cloth of gold and sainted all along Our departed friend came forth a boy ping on cloth of gold and saluted all along the line by handelapping of applause. Country parsonages do not rock their babies in satin lined egadle or afterward send them out into the world with enough in their hands to purchase place and power. Pastors' salaries in the early part of this century hardly ever reached $700 a year. Economies that sometimes cut into the bone characterized many of the homes of the New England clergymen. The young lawyer of whom we speak to-day arrived in San Francisco in 1849 with only $10 in his pocket. Williamstown College was only introductory to a post-graduate course which our illustrious friend took while administering justice and halting ruffanism amid the mining camps of California. Ob, those "forty-niners," as they were called, through what privations, through what narrow escapes, amid what exposures they moved! Administering and executing law among outlaws never has been an easy undertaking. Among mountaineers, many of whom had no regard for human life and where the snap of points of the snap pistol and bang of gun were not hnusual responses, required courage of the highest metal.

Behind a dry goods box surmounted by tailow candies Judge Field began his judicial career. What exciting seenes he passed through! An infernal machine was handed to him, and inside the lid of the box was pasted his decision in the Pueblo case, the decision that had balked unprincipled speculators. Ten years ago his life. cipied speculators. Ten years ago his life would have passed out had not an officer of the law shot down his assailant. It took a long training of hardship and abuse and misinterpretation and threat of violence and flash of assassin's knife to fit him for the high place where he could defy legislatures and congresses and presidents and the and congresses and presidents and the world when he knew he was right. Hard-ship is the grindstone that sharpens intel-lectual faculties, and the swords with which to strike effectively for God and

of Trophonius! How suggestive the invitation which William Wirt, the great Virginian, wrote his friend inviting him to yonder Supreme Courtroom: "To-morrow & week will come traordinary usefulness in their spheres, legal, commercial, literary and theological, and a daughter, the mother of one of the associate justices of the Supreme Court. Such families counter-balance for good those families all wrong from generation to generation—families that stand for wealth, unrighteously got and stingily kept or wickedly squandered; families that stand for fraud or impurity or malevolence; family names that immediately come to every mind, though through sense of propristy they do not come to the fip. The name of Field will survive centuries and be a synonym for religion, for great jurispruthe compass of his power to avoid it. Come to Washington. It will be a combat worth witnessing." The Supreme Court has stood so high in England and the United States name of Field will survive centuries and a synonym for religion, for great jurispruson so high in England and the Cunted dence, for able Christian journalism, as the that the vices of a few who have occupied that important place have not been able to the Casars that important place have not been able to the corruption of disgrace it, neither the corruption of Francis Bacon, nor the cruelty of Sir George Mackenzie, nor the Sabbath desecra-tion of Lord Castlereagh.

To that highest of all tribunals Abraham Lincoln called our friend, but he lived long enough to honor the Supreme Court more than it had ever honored him. For more than thirty-four years he sat in the pres-ence of this nation and of all nations a model judge. Fearlessness, integrity, devotion to principle, characterized him. No bribe ever touched his hand. No profane word ever scalded his tongue. No blemish word ever scalded his tongue. No blemish of wrong ever marred his character. Fully qualified was he to have his name associated in the history of this country with the greatest of the judiciary.

To have done well, all that such a profession could ask of him, and to have made that profession still more honorable by his brilliant and sublime life, is enough for national and international terrestrial and brilliant and sublime life, is enough for national and international, terrestrial and celestial congratulation. And then to expire beautifully, while the prayers of his church were being offered at his bedside, the door of heaven opening for his entrance as the door of earth opened for his departure, the sob of the earthly farewell caught up into raptures that never die. Yes, he lived and died in the faith of the old fashloned Caristian religion.

caught up into raptures that never die. Yes, he lived and died in the faith of the old fashioned Christian religion.

Young man, I want to tell you that Justice Field believed in the Bible from lid to lid, a book all true either as doctrine or history, much of it the history of events that neither God nor man approves. Our friend drank the wine of the holy sagrament and ate the bread of which "if a man eat he shall never hunger." He was the up and down, out and out friend of the church of Christ. If there had been anything illogical in our religion, he would have scouted it, for he was a logician. If there had been in it anything unreasonable, he would have rejected it, because he was a great reasoner. If there had been in it anything that would not stand research, he would have exploded the fallacy, for his life was a life of research. Young men of Washington, young men of America, young men of the round world, a religion that would stand the test of Justice Field's penetrating and all ransacking intellect must have in it something worthy of your confidence. I tell you now that Christianlity has not only the heart of the world on its side, but the brain of the world also. Ye who have tried to represent the religion of the Bible as something pusillanimous, bow do you account for the Christian faith of Stephen J. Field, whole shelves of the law library occupied with his magnificent decisions?

And now may the God of all comfort speak to the bereft, especially to her who heaven gloriously won! That was the kind of name that Justice Field augmented and adorned and perpetuated—a name honorable at the close of the eighteenth century, more honored now at the close of the nineteenth.

Notice also that our illustrious friend was great in reasonable and genial dissent. Of 1042 opinions he rendered, none were more potent or memorable than those rendered while he was in small minority and sometimes in a minority of one. A learned and distinguished lawyer of this And now may the God of all comfort

DUST AND ITS VALUE.

Without It Man Would Have to Devise a

New Plan of Existence-The Earth Conpheric Particles.

"It it wasn't for dust," said Profes-Agricultural Department at Washington, recently to W. E. Curtis, of the Chicago Record, "man would have to devise a new plan of existence; he would be compelled to provided himself with food by some other means than agriculture. You could not have a garden or a farm without dust. It would not be possible for a crop to grow unless the soil contained an organism capable of converting nitrogenous matter into nitric acid. Nitrogen is indispensable as plant food, and plants can assimilate it only when presented in the form of nitrle acid, is incapable of auto-locomotion and can be distributed only through the dust which falls upon the soil and upon the leaves of trees and plants. Hence dust is essential to the pursuit of agriculture, and if it wasn't being | tioned by any one. carried about constantly on the breeze through the air we would simply have to quit farming; animals would have nothing to feed upon, and we would have neither meat nor brend nor vege-

"I have been spending some years," continued Professor Wiley, "in the investigation of the agricultura, value of dust, and it is a very important subject. The soil is continually being revived and enriched from the particles that are floating about in the atmosphere. They come from two sources: first, atoms of the earth's surface caught up by the wind and distributed elsewhere, and, second, what we call cosmic dust-that is, mineral matter of meteoric origin. "We are getting gradually to understand its quantity, its value and the important part it plays in agriculture. The heavenly bodies are constantly shedding fragments of iron and other mineral substances, which fall with great velocity, and when they reach the atmosphere that surrounds the earth are heated by friction and catch fire by contact with the oxygen. They are then burned to ashes and scattered in minute and invisible atoms. Some of the larger pieces that become detached from the stars reach the earth without being entirely consumed. We call them meteors; but the little particles that permeates the air, because of this perpetual and violent bombardment from the stars, are composed of phosphoric acid, potash and other chemicals, which are absolutely essential in renewing the fertility of the

"What we call terrestrial dust is also of great importance to agriculture. In many places the soil is almost entirely composed of particles that have been left there by the winds. This is particularly true of soils that are made up of volcanic ashes, which are carried immense distances from the craters. A considerable percentage of the soil on the earth's surface was originally volcanic dust, which has been distributed by that good friend of man we call the wind. Pompeli and Herculaneum illustrate the great depth to which volcanic dust may reach. These are called Aeolian soils.

"The clouds are water dust. Fog is a mixture of water, coal, terrestrial and meteoric dust. The fogs of London might be considerably reduced if the people would burn hard coal.

"The dust from the streets of cities is of a composite nature and carries ali sorts of fragments and atoms in various stages of decay. It has a high degree of agricultural significance, because it is loaded with germs of all kinds. Some of them are very useful and some are injurious. The effect upon the public health is not injurious except where the dust carries pathogenic germs-that is, the germs of disease. As an illustration, the sputa of a consumptive, if ejected on the sidewalk, is reduced to dust when it dries and is then distributed through the air in the form of germs. If they find lodgment in the lungs of a human being whose physical condition allows them to revive and grow, the disease gets a foothold and can be conveyed from one to another."

Customs in Giving Wedding Presents.

Giving wedding presents is an old custom, but it differs in different countries. Scotland's penny weddings were peculiar. They were called penny affairs, but the invited guests contributed shillings, and occasionally a halfcrown, and out of the sums thus collected the expenses of the wedding feast were paid. Germany has a "pay wedding," at which the bride receives her guests with a basin before her, in which each person entering deposits a jewel, a silver spoon or a piece of money.

In some parts of Germany the rule is that the expenses of the marriage feast shall be met by each guest paying for what he eats and drinks-a sort of European plan wedding, you might call it. The prices paid for dishes and drinks are high, and the happy young couple make a handsome profit out of their wedding, often realizing a sum sufficient to start them pretty nicely in life. Often 300 guests are present at such a wedding. Sometimes the flow of presents is in the other direction. In Poland, for instance, a girl is not regarded as eligible for mariage until she has wrought with her own hands cloth and garments for the friends who will accompany her future lord to the altar,

Right to Work "Overtime."

In France it is forbidden to ask or pernit an employe to work more than twelve hours a day in any circumstances. The Comte de Dion, head of a great automobile factory near Paris, was tried on Thursday for violating this law. His workmen protested against the arrest, as they were paid liberally for "overtime." But as the law is mandatory, the Court was compelled to fine him.

As M. de Dion's workmen said in their petition, this law is not a help but a hindrance to the working man. In every trade and profession the men who "get on" do so because by making the sacrifices involved in working "overtime" they accumulate a lead over their fellow workmen, and so presently raise themselves to a better condition.

Work done in the regular hours is largely for the benefit of the employer. 'Overtime" work is work for one's self. A law that forbids "overtime" is a law not only denying the fundamental human right to liberty, but also that other fundamental human right to try to get on in
