"I have saved my life, snatched me from the brink of the grave almost, and I wish to thank you. About eighteen months ago I was a total wreck, physically. I had been troubled with leucorrhoea for some time, but had given hardly any attention to the trouble. "At last inflammation of the womb and ovaries resulted and then I suffered agonies, had to give up my profession (musician and piano player), was confined to my bed and life became a terrible cross. My husband summoned the best physicians, but their benefit was but temporary at best. I believe I should have contracted the morphine habit under their care, if my common sense had not intervened. "One day my husband noticed the advertisement of your remedies and immediately bought me a full trial. Soon the pain in my ovaries was gone. I am now well, strong and robust, walk, ride a wheel, and feel like a girl in her teens. I would not be without Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; it is like water of life to me. I am very gratefully and sincerely your well-wisher, and I heartily recommend your remedies. I hope some poor creature may be helped to health by reading my story."—Mrs. Col. E. P. THE EMINENT DIVINE'S SUNDAY DISCOURSE.

Subject: Buyers and Sellers—Novel Views on the Business Life—High Commendment to Commercial Integrity—Trickery in Trade Denounced.

(Copyright, Louis Klopsch, 1899.)

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Integrity and trickery in business life form the subject of Dr. Talmage's sermon, and the contrast he establishes between the two is a striking one. The text is Proverbs 11:1: "It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer, but when he is gone his way then he boasteth." "Palaces are not such prisons as the world imagines. If you think that the only time kings and queens come forth from the royal gates is in procession and gorgeously attended, you are mistaken. Inognito by day or by night and clothed in citizen's apparel or the dress of a working woman, they come out and see the world as it is. In no other way could King Solomon, the author of my text, have known everything that was going on. From my text I am sure he must, in disguise, some day have walked into a store of ready-made clothing in Jerusalem and stood near the counter and heard a conversation between a buyer and a seller. The merchant put a price on a coat, and the customer began to dicker and said: "Absurd! That coat is not worth what you ask for it. Why, just look at the coarseness of the fabric! See that spot on the collar. Besides that, it does not fit. Twenty dollars for that? Why, it is not worth more than $10. They have a better article than that for lower price down at Clothem, Pitem & Bros. Besides that, I really must go at any price, good morning." "Hold!" says the merchant. "Do not go off in that way. I want to sell you that coat. I have some payments to make, and I want the money. Come, now, how much will you give for the coat?" "Well," says the customer, "I will split the difference. You asked $20, and I said $10. Now, I will give you $15." "Well," says the merchant, "it is a great sacrifice, but take it at that price."

Then the customer with a roll under his arm started to go out and enter his own place of business, and Solomon in disguise followed him. He heard the customer as he unrolled the coat say: "Boys, I have made a great bargain. How much do you guess I gave for that coat?" "Well," says one, wishing to compliment his enterprise, "you gave $9 for it." Another says, "I should think you got it cheap if you gave $25." "No," says the buyer in triumph, "I got it for $15. I beat him down and pointed out the imperfections until I really made him believe it was not worth hardly anything. It takes me to make a bargain. Ha, ha!" Oh, man you got the goods for less than they were worth by positive falsehood, and no wonder, when Solomon went back to his palace and had put off his disguise, that he sat down at his writing desk and made for all ages a crayon sketch of you "It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer, but when he is gone his way then he boasteth."

There are no higher styles of men in all the world than those now at the head of mercantile enterprises in the great cities of this continent. Their casual promise is as good as a bond with piles of collaterals. Their reputation for integrity is as well established as that of Petrarch residing in the family of Cardinal Colonna. It is related that when there was great disturbance in the family the cardinal called all his people together and put them under oath to tell the truth except Petrarch; when he came up to swear, the cardinal took away his book and said, "As for you, Petrarch, your word is sufficient." Never since the world stood have there been so many merchants whose transactions can stand the test of the Ten Commandments. Such bargain makers are all the more to be honored, because they have withstood year after year temptations which have hung so many a fat and flung them so hard they can never recover themselves. While all positions in life have powerful besetments to evil there are specific forms of ailment which are peculiar to each occupation and profession, and it will be useful to speak of the peculiar temptations of business men.

First, as in the scene of the text, business men are often tempted to sacrifice plain truth, the seller by exaggerating the value of goods, and the buyer by deprecating them. We cannot but admire an expert salesman. See how he first induces the customer into a mood favorable to the proper consideration of the value of the goods. He shows himself to be an honest and frank salesman. How carefully the lights are arranged till they fall just right upon the fabric! Beginning with goods of medium quality, he gradually advances toward items of more thorough make and of more attractive pattern. How he watches the moods and whims of his customer. With what perfect calmness he takes the order and bows the purchaser from his presence, who goes away, having made up his mind that he has bought the goods at a price which will allow him a living margin when he again sells them. He will speak worth what the salesman said they were and were sold at a price which will not make it necessary for the house to fall every ten years in order to fix up its range.

But with what burning indignation we think of the iniquitous strategems by which goods are sometimes disposed of. A glance at the morning papers shows the results of one of our hotels of a young merchant from one of the inland cities. He is a comparative stranger in the great city, and, of course, he must be shown around, and it will be the duty of some of the prevailing houses to escort him. He is a large purchaser and has plenty of time and money, and it will pay to be very attentive. The evening is spent at a place of doubtful amusement. Then they go back to the hotel. Having just come to town they must, of course, drink.

A friend from the same mercantile establishment drops in, and usage and generosity suggest that they must drink. Business prospects are talked over, and the stranger is warned against certain dilapidated mercantile establishments that are about to fail, and for such kindness and magnanimity of caution against the dishonesty of other business houses of course it is expected they will—and so they do—take a drink. Other merchants loitering in adjoining rooms find it hard to sleep for the number of decanters, and the coarse carousal of these "hall fellows well met" waxes louder. But they sit not all night at the wine cup. They must see the sights. They stagger forth with cheeks flushed and eyes bloodshot. The outer gates of hell open to let in the vintners. The wings of lost souls lit among the lights, and the steps of the carousers sound with the rambunctious thunders of the lost. Farewell to all the sanctities of home! Could mother, sister, father, slumbering in the inland home, in some vision of that night catch a glimpse of the ruin wrought they would find out their hair by the roots and bite the tongue till the blood spouted, shrieking out, "God save him!"

What, suppose you, will come upon such business establishments? And there are hundreds of them in the cities. They may boast of fabulous sales, and they may have an unprecedented run of buyers, and the doors of the house may be a terror to all rivals, and from this thrifty root there may spring up branch houses in other cities, and all the partners of the firm may move into their mansions and drive their full blooded span, and the families may sweep the street with the most elegant apparel that human art ever wove or earthly magnificence ever achieved. But a curse is gathering surely for those men, and if it does not seize hold of the pillars and in one wild ruin bring down the temple of commercial glory it will break up their peace, and they will tremble with sickness and blot with dissipation, and, pushed to the precipice of ruin, they will try to hold back and cry for help, but no help will come, and they

VARICOSE VEINS.

Some Measures of Relief for This Disagreeable Malady.

According to those wise men who delight to remind us on every occasion of man's lowly origin, varicose veins are among the penalties we have to pay for standing on our hind legs instead of walking on all fours like the other animals. It is chiefly, they say, the pressure of the very high column of blood upon the comparatively thin walls of the veins that causes them to become dilated or "varicose." There are other causes, however, that no doubt contribute to the establishment of this unpleasant affection. The veins of the legs are so far from the heart that the blood in them is comparatively little influenced by either the pushing or the suction force of the heart's contraction. The contraction of the muscles of the legs, also, while in some cases it favors the emptying of the veins, in others constricts them, and dams back the blood. The constricting action of the garter naturally favors the occurrence of varicose veins, although, curiously enough, the trouble is more common in men than in women. Finally, the enlargement of the veins may be favored by a general loss of tone in the system; the muscles and all the fleshy parts become flabby and do not support the veins as they should, and the walls of the veins themselves participate in the general relaxation and dilate. The discomfort caused by varicose veins is often very severe. The limb feels heavy and distended, and there is a more or less constant, dull ache, amounting sometimes to actual pain of a burning character. Often in neglected cases, or after the trouble has lasted for a long time, ulcers form on the legs, which are very difficult to heal. More rarely a greatly distended vein may rupture, forming a purplish discoloration beneath the skin, or if the skin has become thinned it also may break and a severe hemorrhage results. There is no actual cure for varicose veins except a surgical operation, which is seldom desirable, and we must be contented usually with such relief as can be had by supporting the dilated veins by means of an elastic stocking. This should be put on immediately on rising in the morning and worn throughout the day. In severe cases the patient should remain in bed or on a lounge for a few days, with the limb raised on a pillow in order to favor the emptying of the engorged veins, while if there are any signs of inflammation, cloths wet in a cooling lotion may be laid on the part.—Youth's Companion.

Regarding Red Headed People.
Red-headed people, as is well known, are less subject to baldness than others. A London doctor explains the matter thus: The hair of the red-headed is relatively thick, one red hair being almost as thick as five fair or three brown hairs. With 30,000 red-hairs the scalp is well thatched, whereas with the same number of fair hairs one is comparatively bald. It takes 160,000 fair and 105,000 brown hairs to cover adequately an ordinary head.

Then She Thought.
Mrs. Grimes—Mr. Gushwell was real good, wasn't he? Relict of Departed Politician—Yes; but one thing I didn't like, what he said about Tom having filed every office in the gift of the people. Tom was no beggar; whatever he got he paid for.—Boston Transcript.

Mothers take more pride in the garments of the baby than in those of any other member of the household; dresses of sheer India linen, soft flannels, dainty woolen socks, cashmere shawls, afghans in bright colors, all are the most expensive that the family purse can afford. It is not necessary that they should be renewed frequently, as almost the only wear is in the washing.

Ordinary soaps should never be used; they will weaken the fibre of light materials, causing them to tear easily or to wear into holes.

In some parts of Switzerland a custom obtains for the friends of a bride to present an elaborate cheese to her on her wedding day. It is then used as a family register and heirloom—the births, deaths and marriages of the various members of the family being recorded upon it. Some of these old cheeses date back as far as 1660. A country squire exhibited one at Gesseny, at an agricultural show, which was from 170 to 180 years old. It had been an heirloom in a family residing in the canton of Vaud, after which it became the property of its present possessor, who resides in the Canton Berne.
