Prices Paid at Sales.

Live stock is keeping up its good record for high prices at public sales this spring. Cows and young cattle are bringing very good prices. Hogs are up to the top notch. Good horses bring very good prices; fair, shifts and plugs are not quite up to expectation in prices. Farm implements and truck are bringing their value.

The Spring Millinery

The majority of the new hats are distinguished by the decided downward flare at the back. Another important item in up-to-date millinery is the low, almost flat crown. The new straws and braids, the new floral and other trimmings are pictured described at length in the April Delineator, which also devotes a page to illustrating the various steps in the construction of a stylish Marquise hat from a Fifth Avenue shop.

Rebersburg Contemplating the Expenditure of Several Thousand Dollars for Water. The Rebersburg water company, in which most of the citizens of that place are interested, are contemplating the expenditure of three or four thousand dollars to improve their water plant.

The subject is being discussed pro and con at the present time but no definite conclusions have been reached on several points. A resolution on the minutes at present calls for 4-inch cast iron pipes, similar to those in use in Centre Hall, and better than which there are none. There is a sentiment growing however for an enameled steel pipe, which may be adopted. The pipe line is about one mile in length, the water being piped from the gap stream south of Rebersburg.

FLOATING ISLANDS

One Island, Covering Two Acres,

Seen In the Gulf Stream. Of all passengers carried by ocean currents floating islands are the most interesting. 'Many of them have been found voyaging on the Atlantic. These islands were originally parts of low lying river banks which broke away under stress of storm or flood and floated out to sea. The Orinoco, the Amazon, the La Plata and other tropical rivers often send forth such pieces of their shores. Some of the bits of land are of large size and carry animals, insects and vegetation, even at times including trees, the roots of which serve to hold the land intact, while their branches and leaves serve as sails for the wind. Generally the waves break up these islands shortly after they put to sea, but sometimes, under favorable conditions, they travel long distances.

The longest voyage of a floating fsland, according to government records, took place in 1893. This island was first seen off Florida, and apparently it had an area of two acres. It bore no trees, but it was thickly covered with bushes, and in one place it was thirty feet high above the sea level. It was in the gulf stream, traveling slowly and with occasional undulations to show where the ground swell was working beneath it. Probably it got away from its river anchorage in the spring of the year, for toward the latter part of July it had reached the latitude of Wilmington, Del.

No large animal life had been seen on it, though there must have been myriads of the small creeping things which abound in the tropics. By the end of August it had passed Cape Cod and was veering toward the Grand banks. It followed the steamer lane routes quite accurately, and several vessels reported it. One month later it was in midocean northwest of the Azores, and its voyage evidently was beginning to tell on it. It was much smaller and less compact. It was not seen again, and probably it met destruction in the October gales. But it had traveled at least 1,000 miles, and if, as was thought, it came from the Orinoco, it must have covered twice

It is quite possible that floating islands larger than this one, under more favoring circumstances, might during past ages have made the complete journey from America to Europe or Africa and so brought about a distribution of animal species. Of course it is not absolutely certain that this island went to pieces in October. It might, though this is not probable, have floated down into the region of calms and seaweed, where it would be longer preserved .-Theodore Waters in Ainslee's
