THE PANAMA HAT.

Where It Is Made-Che Material Used and

The Panama hat is the craze in all America just now.

Among the false notions regarding Panama hats-and there are prevalent a great many-is that of its origin. The name, in the first place, would lead one to believe that the fabric is manufactured in Panama, whereas the fact is that Ecuador, Colombia and Guayaquil produce two-thirds of all the Panamas in the market. The city of Panama is merely a shipping port for these hats brought from other places. It is the metropolis for the northern part of South America.

Another erroneous idea that prevails is that the natives weave these precious hats under water. The belief probably owes its origin to the method of soaking the raw materials in water prior to their being woven. There is nothing extraordinary about this, the object being merely to soften the " straw " so that it will be pliable and easy to handle.

To call a Panama a straw hat is, by the way, incorrect for it is not made of straw at all; the material used in its manufacture is either stem of a palm leaf or a rare sort of grass that grows in South America. The natives are very deft in curing and weaving both of these products. The palm they tear in shreds with their teeth until it spreads out fan shape. After a long soaking, the palm stem is taken out of he water and nailed on a rough-looking block, at which the workman sits for weeks at a time carefully putting in place shred after shred.

Even a Panama of medium quality can not be had for less than $10 00, and from that price on up to $15 00. The popular hat is one costing from $12 00 to $20 00

Sleeping In Spectneles.

Some people wear their eyeglasses or spectacles to bed, for the simple reason that they cannot sleep without them on; at least that's what an optician says, and he ought to know, for confessions were recently made to him upon the point. A woman had repentedly come to him with the bows of her spectacles so badly twisted that he asked her how under the sun she ever managed to get them in such a state. He says that he had visions of some childish hands having a part in the work, some little one that like! to play with mamma's glasses.

But the woman said that she hat been wearing glasses so much of recent years that finally she had taken to wearing them to bed as the only way of getting to sleep. She said that it was only within the past few weeks that she had any trouble from the custom, as she ordinarily managed to keep the front part of her face off the pillow; but lately she must have had bad sleep, with more or less night-

Popping With a Pipe. Among the Tebulian Tartars a curious mode of "popping the question" is reported. The Tchulinn Colebs in search of a wife, having filled a brand new pipe with fragrant tobacco, stealthily enters the dwelling of the fair one upon whom he has bestowed his affections, deposits the pipe upon a conspicuous article of furniture and retires on tiptoe to some convenient hiding place in the neighborhood, local etiquette requiring that he should execute this strategic movement apparently undetected by the damsel of his choice or any member of her

Presently be returns without further affectation of secrecy and looks into the apartments in a casual sort of way. A single glance at the pipe he left behind him enables him to learn the fate of his proposal.

If it has been smoked, he goes forth an accepted and exultant bridegroom; has been so irrevocably rejected as not to be worth even a pipe of tobacco.
