QUAY BLACK-JACK PARTY.

Independent Citizens Assailed By Rioters.

TOUGHS FOR PENNYPACKER.

Disgraceful Scenes in a Bogus Convention—Honest Men a Unit For Pattison and Guthrie.

The Philadelphia Ledger gives this impartial account of the assault on the Union Party state convention in that city last week:

More than 200 men, some of them armed with revolvers, knives and blackjacks, claiming to be regularly elected delegates from different parts of the state, captured the Union party state convention by forcing the doors of Musical Fund Hall yesterday, and amidst the utmost disorder, went through the force of nominating Samuel W. Pennypacker for governor, William M. Brown for lieutenant governor and Isaac B. Brown for secretary of internal affairs.

During the interval that elapsed between the forcing of the front door of the hall and the breaking down of the barriers that were raised to prevent entry to the convention room, on the second floor, three men are known to have been injured—Andrew MacAlister, who was struck a blow on the head with a blackjack; Louis J. Minick, who was stabbed in the leg with a dirk knife, and an unknown man, who had a knife thrust through his wrist.

As soon as the attacking party had entered the convention hall they took possession of the front seats. State Chairman Ritter ordered those not delegates to retire to the rear of the room, but his words were greeted with jeers. He finally had the call for the convention read, and as Secretary Mapes was about to read off the temporary roll motion was made that William R. Knight be made temporary chairman, and he was lifted bodily by his friends, between two policemen, on to the platform, and the control of the convention handed into the hands of Pennypacker's supporters.

Knight and State Chairman Ritter held their places and attempted to address the respective followers. When one would open his mouth the other side would jeer. But Knight's voice was stronger, and he did not heed the interruptions. He followed the schedule he had prepared for himself, despite the interruptions, and announced the nomination of the three Republican candidates for state offices, regarding the issue of the election as won through with its work he sat down, with the determination of forcing the other side to leave the hall without having taken action.

Chairman Ritter was compelled to adjourn the convention to the Continental Hotel, where Robert E. Pattison was nominated for governor, W. Guthrie for lieutenant governor and Lewis W. Emery, an independent Republican, for secretary of internal affairs, and a platform was adopted.

An Object Lesson of Machine Methods Editorially the Ledger says:

"The violent and shameful methods adopted by the followers of Durham and Ashbridge to break up the state convention of the Union Party are a characteristic exhibition of machine brutality and lawlessness. The actual delegates were no match in physical force, for the organized band of thugs that forced possession of the hall, and they prudently withdrew and held the convention in another place.

"Freedom of political action, the security of citizenship, must summon all their souls to their defense, irrespective of party name. The organization that seeks to maintain itself by crime and violence is condemned in the sight of all honest people, and its candidates must suffer condemnation with it. The gang that drove the Union convention from Musical Fund Hall was organized by phiscons and minions of the Quay- Ashbridge machine, and carried out a plot with the connivance of the police.

"That such infamous means should be resorted to is evidence of the dread which this movement has inspired in the Quay camp. This lawless nomination of the Quay candidates by a criminal mob emphasizes their identification with the powers of evil that set law and decency at defiance, made elections a mockery, and wantonly insult the decency of the state and the city. It is a fresh notice to the people of Pennsylvania, of the criminal powers from which they are called upon to emancipate themselves, not in the name of any party or faction, but in the name of the commonwealth of law and liberty.

A Disgrace to the City.

The Press, a Pennypacker supporter, is impelled to make this comment:

"The scene at Musical Fund Hall yesterday was a disgrace to the city. It is always easy to pack a convention of the party whose name and interests are the Union Party, and do it with some color of right. But no one can fairly doubt that of the opposing factions yesterday the one represented by Chairman Ritter is the legitimate heir of the Union Party of a year ago.

"The Knight convention showed its unscrupulous, unprincipled character by nominating the entire Republican ticket on the Union Party platform of last year. Nothing could be more incongruous, inconsistent and incompatible. They thrust aside the only constitutionally able one on the theory that no one in the convention remembered what the Union platform was when they unanimously adopted it. One of the plank in their platform was that they would have the spectacle of Judge Pennypacker and William M. and Isaac B. Brown running on a platform which favors fusion with the Democratic state organization."

Desperation of the Bosses.

The Record editorially says: "The proceedings of the Union state convention in this city yesterday bear their own comment. The hall in which the delegates were to assemble was stormed by a crowd of city ruffians, who made all regular procedure impossible. They thrust aside the only constitutionally able one on the theory that no one in the convention remembered what the Union platform was when they unanimously adopted it. One of the plank in their platform was that they would have the spectacle of Judge Pennypacker and William M. and Isaac B. Brown running on a platform which favors fusion with the Democratic state organization."

"A Wretched Piece of Bulldozing."

is the heading of the Evening Bulletin, an earnest supporter of Pennypacker, which indignantly says:

"The violent proceedings in Musical Fund Hall for the capture of the Union party convention were a disgrace to all who were concerned in them, either as instigators or participants. The nomination which was given to Judge Pennypacker by the mob of bulldozers was a mere travesty of convention forms. Indeed, the whole movement was such a mockery of decency and fair play that it can be regarded by the public only with contempt and disgust. Such a nomination can bring neither strength nor credit to Judge Pennypacker, and when tendered to him he ought to repudiate it as the product of a lawless piece of chicanery and rascality. It is not clear that there was much political horse sense or prudence behind this raid on the remains of the Union party, for its chief effect will now be to give the Democratic Unionists more of a standing in public sentiment than they possibly could have had if they had been left quietly alone."

Even the Bosses Ashamed of It.

The North American editorially observes:

"The desperate folly of the machine culminated in the riot of thieves and thugs in the Union party's convention hall and forced the convention to endorse the Democratic ticket. No other result was possible. Many important delegations entered the convention to endorse any nominations, but after the riotous invasion by Quay's gang the vote to nominate the Democratic candidates was unanimous. The effect of the outrage committed by the Quayites will be disastrous to the machine ticket. It is doubtful if anything which has been done or may be done or said during the campaign will drive so many voters away from the machine. The assault upon the convention was so brutally idiotic that even the machine organs cannot find excuses for it, and Quay and Penrose, who inspired it, now denounce and repudiate it. They see that the consequences do not depend entirely upon the action of the Union party, but will be felt in the revulsion of voters from the machine regardless of the status of the Union ticket."

Every day since the Erie convention the prospect of the election of its ticket has brightened. In every part of the state there is a rising tide of public sentiment in favor of Pattison, Guthrie, Nolan and reform.

Every Democrat has something to do this year. Let every part of the organization be strengthened, every doubtful voter be looked after, every public meeting made a brilliant success.

Lookout for Pennypacker's record next week. The Quay dummy will appear as he really is. The great political confidence game will be thoroughly shown up.
