To my Friends and Patrons:

I desire to state that the statement made by certain parties that they paid a larger percentage on the Finkle loss than we did is false, we paid our full pro-rata on the Finkle building, and receipts are in this office which any of my friends can see if they desire. There were several other companies interested, and we were the minority people in the matter. We had no control over the matter except to pay our share, the majority of the insurance was controlled by another party.

I do not wish to make any comments to add to the difference of opinions which has existed at Spring Mills, and which has led to many false and ridiculous rumors, except to say that we have explicit confidence in the citizens of Spring Mills, and do not believe that there is any one there who would burn out his neighbor. This agency writes insurance for fifteen of the leading insurance companies of the world, and we will not cancel any policy, in fact we have taken on some eight or ten new lines, within the past few days.

Yours very truly, GRANT HOOPER. Bellefonte, Pa., March 24.

Rain and mud; mud and rain seems to be the daily program of late.

Ye citizens of Miles township, or you who take an interest in school work: Why do you not help the school cause along in getting up a term of summer school? Why do some of the citizens of this township send their children to other points? Is it prejudice? We have all the facilities, they can have, a good building, centrally located, one of the finest young men in (the person of Prof. Ziegler) in the state, fully qualified. Then why not facilitate the means at hand by grasping "opportunity" by the forelock. It seems a certain class of our people are adverse to school matters of late.

The air was chilly and the wind swept across the open country with such force as to raise the sand and cut the faces of the men, producing a sharp, burning sensation.

The troops all went into their assigned positions in the morning and had a long, cold wait. We nearly froze so we stacked arms and dropped out of ranks to stir ourselves into warmth, when, suddenly, at 12:30 the sullen boom of the signal gun rolled across the plain announcing the beginning of the drama.

President Lincoln came, followed by hundreds of Generals, Colonels and officers of lower rank, a host of foreign military men, (and we cursed the crown emblems they wore,) all mounted and followed by a host of orderlies, at a lively gallop and formed on a rise of ground from which the whole plain and the great army of a hundred thousand was in sight. Seldom is there a more gorgeous array of great military men and a finer army, brought together in any country.

It was a magnificent pageant. All was ready and the grand review began; the artillery came first, and this was a scene that cannot be described; on a gallop they passed the reviewing stand and off the field, making a magnificent display of military power.

Then came the infantry, which was drawn up in Divisions. The Corps were reviewed separately but all on the same ground; still, quietly standing, covering the plain in compact masses, stretched the columns of the great army, on which the hopes of the nation rested.

On the opposite side of the river were the camps of the enemy, Fredericksburg and the frowning forts beyond. Now and then the sun appeared and lighted up the field but was as often soon again clouded over.

The infantry review now began. The 2nd (our) corps was first and we passed the President and reviewing officers about one o'clock p. m. The troops being massed and in close order, we were obliged to "double quick" march for a long distance in order to clear the way for the next oncoming division or there would have been a jam on the field. As soon as we cleared the field we broke into regiments and marched to our respective regimental camps; we reached our camp at two o'clock.

During the review the confederates on the opposite side of the river seemed greatly disturbed; they no doubt expected a demonstration; their picket lines were doubled along the river and a lively movement from the city took place. People could be seen running from the city, out and over the Marie hills to the rear. Reinforcements were also sent to our lines along the river and our forts on Stafford Heights fully manned.

April 16th, '63, was a notable day for our Regiment; it was our first pay day, after a service of nearly eight months; we were paid up to the first of March. No set was done since we entered the service that met the approbation of the boys so well; they seemed inspired with new life and the sutler's shops, heretofore but little patronized, now attracted them in crowds. Yet we had an economical regiment. Forty-five thousand dollars were sent by the regiment to friends and families at home; our Company, (A) however, stood at the head in the regiment in this line, having sent five thousand five hundred dollars.

About this time the Meyer gang was "short" by one rubber blanket and there was to be one "found" somewhere. We did not like Gen. Meacher, of the Irish Brigade, and he must, therefore, furnish us with the needed "rubber" sooner or later. For more than a week we "prowled" his head quarters but there was no available "rubber" to be seen. One afternoon it rained and Billy came in and reported that Gen. Meacher had a fine, new rubber blanket hanging over the front of his cook tent to keep the rain out; this, it was decided, was the "rubber" that must be "adopted" by the Meyers. The night set in very dark and at a late hour William, Henry and I crept out of our tent and went over to the Irish Brigade camp; we crept up quite close, William knew best where it hung, so he went to get it while we watched; William moved so quietly that with all our listening we could not hear him. Soon we heard the tent "flop" as the blanket was jerked off and the guard yelled, but we had the blanket and we "dashed" for home, through darkness, brush and mud and sneaked into our camp and tent unobserved.

Lieutenant Brady, a miserable tyrant on the brigade staff, hated and envied our regiment and imposed on us by every opportunity. One day he cut the ear of one of the 148th boys half off with his sword in an attempt to split his head, as he said; he had incurred the ill will of the entire regiment and Co. "A" had also said vengeance against him and it was decided that he must furnish sole leather to sole our shoes, as far as his saddle flaps would reach, so one night comrade Kiehnfelter went over and cut the flaps off his saddle and the next day a number of us had our shoes half soled by comrade Fred Limb cut.

Danger of Colds and Grip. The greatest danger from colds and grip is their resulting in pneumonia. If reasonable care is used, however, Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is taken, all danger will be avoided. Among the tens of thousands who have used this remedy for these diseases we have yet to learn of a single case having resulted in pneumonia, which shows conclusively that it is a certain preventive of that dangerous disease. It will cure a cold or an attack of the grip in less time than any other treatment. It is pleasant and safe to take. For sale by C. W. SWARTZ, Tusseyville; F. A. CARSON, Potters Mills; C. J. Finkle, Spring Mills.

SEVERE ATTACK OF GRIP Cured by One Bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

"When I had an attack of the grip last winter (the second one) I actually cured myself with one bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy." says Frank Wherry, Editor of the Enterprise, Shortsville, N. Y. "This is the honest truth, I at times kept from coughing myself to pieces by taking a teaspoonful of this remedy, and when the coughing spell would come on at night I would take a dose and it seemed that in the briefest interval the cough would pass off and I would go to sleep perfectly free from cough and its accompanying pains. To say that the remedy acted as a most agreeable surprise is putting it very mildly. I had no idea that it would or could knock out the grip, simply because I had never tried it for such a purpose, but it did, and it seemed with the second attack of coughing the remedy caused it to not only be of less duration, but the pains were far less severe, and I had not used the contents of one bottle before Mr. Grip had bid me adieu." For sale by C. W. SWARTZ, Tusseyville; F. A. CARSON, Potters Mills; C. J. Finkle, Spring Mills.
