We reached our old winter camp, near Falmouth and Fredericksburg, about eighteen miles from the luckless field of Chancellorsville, toward evening. Once more we stretched our shelter tents over the log walls of our winter cabins.

How glad we were to get back to our old familiar camp. We soon had cheerful fires burning in the chimneys. We at once commenced to cook and eat and clean our clothes. We hung our wet, mud covered clothes in the sun and when dry we beat them with sticks and struck them around stumps; soon the original patriotic blue was again the uniform color. We washed, blacked our shoes. In a week the army was sgain tidy and clean. We received full rations. Rapidly the generally good morals of the army were
