The rural free delivery system is working admirably in this district and is daily growing in favor. All the mails are delivered promptly and on time, with the exception of a few who have no letter boxes and failed to notify postmaster Krape where they to. Of course this neglect would nat- | fine selections. urally cause more or less of a delay, but no doubt all this will be remedied in a short time and the system thoroughly established and cannot fail to give universal satisfaction. Parties not having letter boxes should notify Mr. Krape at once and state very explicitly where they desired their mail matter forwarded to.

The postoffice building is now completed and presents a very handsome and attractive appearance. The interior is beautifully fitted up and tastily all the necessary conveniences is provided exclusively for the rural delivery service. Here the carriers can assort and arrange their mail matter without encroaching or interfering with the general office. Postmaster Krape is to be complimented for erecting such a model and handsome building, which is certainly a credit to the village.

What are the supervisors doing? Apparently and in fact nothing. The roads in Georges Valley are simply execrable, and those in Penns Valley not much better. It is almost impossible to drive beyond a walk in either valley, if the vehicle is to be saved from a general wreck. If the supervisors are indulging in a Rip Van Winkle sleep, it is high time they shake off this drowsy slumber and attend to the duties they were elected to properly discharge. This procrastination, postponement and delay is simply scandalous.

The members of Spring Mills Castle K. G. E., who were at Johnstown last week, attending the sessions of the grand castle, returned on Wednesday last all highly pleased with their visit.

CENTRE COUNTY IN THE CIVIL WAR.

He picked himself up, saying: I can, do better; I will try that again. There to assist with the services here will be for holding the general elections, in was a halt. The colonel sharply asked their respective election districts, on me, what is the matter with your men? papers is sure to know of the wonderful I said, Watson fell over that stump, and has gone back to show us that he can march over it without falling. Watson successfully coming over the stump with a wonderfully high step, and grinning through his great white whiskers that covered his face to the eyes. The colonel grinned too, turned his horse, and the regiment again weighed over two hundred pounds.

Perry, also over six feet, was rugged form of kidney trouble and strong. On the morning of July ommended for everything but if you have kidthe pioneer corps and sent the men to Just the remedy you need. > There were none of the pioneers Dr. Kilmer & Co., Bingkilled at Gettysburg but Perry was hamton, N. Y. Tho badly wounded, and I never saw him regular fifty cent and Home of Swamp-Root

William Long and Jesse Long were also large and strong; faithful in the performance of their duties. Jesse was a successful prowler and a daring forager. If there was a confederate chanticleer or gander any where around he would find him and get him too.

Adam Grim was not as tall or heavy as the rest, but was solid, compact and full share of the arduous work falling to the lot of the pioneers.

John Morchead was a big, heavy, strong man; very quiet in disposition; resolute and ever ready for his full share of service, with either pick or spade, gun or axe. With the latter he was possibly the equal of Watson and Perry. He was killed by a tree falling on him. Very few men were killed in this way, at which we wonder when we think how the trees were cut down by hundreds, often in the darkness of night, when the woods swarmed with men.

Christian Lowry was of good size, heavy set, strong and wiry; cool and daring under nerve trying circumstances and, like all the rest of the corps, ever ready to swing either axe or gun. I was the youngest of the "gang" (twenty) and often felt delicate about giving peremptory orders to men so much older. But they were all very courteous and obedient except once, when they were all balky. That was on the battle field of Gettysburg, July 4th, 1863, while we were burying the dead. They tired of their dreadfully gruesome job. The Pioneers of the 148th P. V. were the only workers left on the field, as far as we could see. This was strange and unfair. The conditions, too, were most disagreeable and exceedingly dangerous. The horrible condition of the dead men and horses; the indescribable and suffocating stench; the frequent dreadfully heavy showers that soaked us to the skin; the great heat between showers. The Confederate sharpshooters in great numbers, hid in the trees beyond the Emmettsburg Road, kept the bullets whistling all the time, adding danger to the gruesome job. Though the bullets buried themselves in the ground all around us and whistled by us continually, none of the pioneers were hit on this day. The "mutiny" lasted about thirty minutes when discipline was restored and the men were all at work again as before, entirely indifferent to repulsive conditions and flying bullets.

ten picked men from the different Centre Hall Fridays, May 8 and 22. companies of the Regiment, whose main qualification was, to be a firstclass axeman, while I was installed as corporal commanding, yet it was sergeant's duty.

The men were furnished with additional "weapons" in the shape of good "pole axes" and digging tools, which implied additional hard work, which did not exempt us from our former duties when time allowed. Therefore, in addition to drills, reviews, inspections and parades, we dug wells, dug up stumps in camp, built quarters, cut wood, built corduroy roads, fortifications and bridges, cut new roads, barricaded old roads, destroyed property, buried the dead, etc., etc., and on marches, we marched at the head of the column, in order to be in position to clear away obstructions. And on battle occasions we pitched aside all superfluous tools and with rifles only, formed our little line of battle, in the rear of the colors, the centre of the Regiment and close to the Regimental line, a point of special peril, as the colors always drew a concentrated fire. For a week the Pioneers were engaged in beautifying the camp and parade ground, clearing it of all brush and stumps, and leveling the parade ground even as a floor.

On May 28th the Pioneers turned June 2nd we joined our respective W. R. Weiser returned Saturday companies in the first drill since the battle of Chancellorsville.

Quiet continued and the month of May ended. June, however, came in with a spirit of unrest in the army. Rumors of impending movements and coming battles were the ever recurring themes of discussion among the men. On June 3rd the Pioneers finished a wiry. He was ever ready to do his twenty-foot well for the Regiment, rigging it in the usual way of army wells, high "crotch posts," and long "sweeps" or tilt poles, to which we attached "dip poles" with camp kettles to the dip ends and heavy stones to the buttends of the tilt poles. We put three of these tilts to the well and then we had plenty of good water right in our camp. It might be stated here that, though we were not sure of staying at any place for even twentyfour hours, all work in and about camp was well and carefully done with a tone of permanency that would indicate a whole years' stay.

By June 1st there was not a stump, bush or stone remaining in our camp, Regimental and company head quarters were models of their kind; our camp was one of the finest in the army and our parade ground would have answered for a dance floor. The weather was beautiful, the health of the men good, and we greatly enjoyed the out-door life, amid the beauty of spring. Improvements were constantly made in our camps. Extensive bakeries were put up throughout the army, and we lived on "soft bread."

During the first week in June my Pioneer band was at work at our brigade bakery, where we built a new bake oven and a bread ware-house. The oven house consisted of a half cylinder of heavy boiler iron, fifteen feet long, six feet in diameter, with a capacity of three hundred twenty-two ounce loaves. We constructed the oven by running a level into a hill, leveling and beating the bottom for a hearth laid with brick then turning the iron arch on this hearth, covered it over with a few feet of ground and built a chimney of stone to the end, while a plate of boiler iron, with a hinged door, constituted the front.
