We occupied the fortifications built on Occoquan Heights, by the enemy in 1861. Very formidable works on naturally strong positions which, well manned, would be well nigh impregnable.

June 17th we were up very early in the morning and many of us washed our shirts in the Occoquan, wrung them out, and put them on our backs to dry, or stay wet, as the fatigue and heat of the day might indicate, it mattered little to us. On the morning of June 18th, the Pioneers, with a heavy detail of men, went out and worked all day. We corduroyed a long stretch of road toward Fairfax Station, on the Orange and Alexandria railroad, for the passage of artillery and wagon trains.

To corduroy a road saplings and small trees are cut into sticks about ten feet long and laid crosswise in the road, tight against each other. Rails, when available, are also used for corduroying purposes.

A corduroyed road is the roughest road imaginable. It rained dreadfully all afternoon and night but that did not stop us in our road making. Brooks and ravines were rushing torrents; water everywhere.

Toward evening our entire brigade, reinforced with cavalry and artillery. went out on picket guard, beyond Fairfax, where we remained until afternoon of the 19th. It rained powerfully all night, during the whole of which we stood in mud and water and endured one of the worst drenchings of our whole experience.

The camp settled into absolute quiet. The tempest "flopped" our tents and tore many of them down, and the rolling thunder became mixed with bad words. The tempest and trees were in conflict overhead and howled. The storm lasted unusually long and men, baggage and "grub"-everything, was

The morning of the 20th dawned clear and bright. Birds sang cheerfully; water sparkled on grass and twigs. The men were astir very early, and at dawn were ready to move.

Several of the forts at Centreville were garrisoned by a Regiment of Ne York Heavy Artillery. The men set their caps high. They wore spotless dress uniforms, white gloves, polished shoes, and brass "scales" on their shoulders. They were "Sunday Soldiers" and had never been out on a campaign or in a battle, yet they complained of their hard service, and thought they had done their full share in the war. They guyed us on our begrimed and war stained uniforms. There was trouble right away; this was too much for the 2nd Corps boys. They "licked" a few of them and mobbed a crowd; raced a squad of them into their fort, and then "cleaned out" their sutler, and had much tobacco and many fine things to eat. We ate butter on our crackers, and had cheese, canned fruit, herring and sardines,

"free of charge." At noon we took the Warranton Road, moving south-west. We reached and forded Bull Run just below the "Stone Bridge," thence southward over the famous Bull Run Battle Field to the Manasses railroad to Gainesville; over Gainesville battle field to Thoroughfare Gap in the Bull Run Mountains.

When night set in we were four miles from the Gap. There was no moon; the sky was heavily clouded, raining steadily. The night was so dark that the roads could only be felt. We moved with the greatest difficulty, at times in the deep darkness, infantry, cavalry artillery and wagon trains were in dreadful mix up, so that, temporarily, all were halted and the road was choked. We reached the gap at midnight, wet from the soles of our feet to the tops of our heads, and plas-

All the skulls we examined were the remains of very young men, many having all the teeth, and all sound. In some of these skulls the third molars were still absent, showing that they were remains of boys under eighteen years of age. It is a well known fact that both the Union and Confederate armies were armies of young men and boys, with, perhaps, the lowest age average of any great army ever marshalled anywhere. This applies to officers and men.

We saw several grinning skeletons, still entire, lying on the surface of the ground, still partially clothed in blue uniforms, shoes on the bony feet and the accoutrements of war still in place.
