DESCRIPTION OF PENN'S CAVE

Penn's Cave is a beautiful summer resort, situated three miles north of Spring Mills, on the Lewisburg and Tyrone railroad. The cave itself is a subterranean cavern fully one-fourth mile in length, the interior of which surpasses description. The walls and ceiling are decorated with myriads of stalactites, and the projecting irregular rocks are studded with stalagmites. Penn's Creek, which empties into the west branch of the Susquehanna river below Sunbury, rises at the mouth of the Cave. The crystal, pure water flows through the Cave and can be navigated by a boat, carrying from twenty-five to forty passengers, the entire length of the Cave. The Cave ends abruptly, the outlet being only large enough to carry away the water. The entrance of the Cave is gained by descending numerous easy steps. The Cave has been situated against the odds ever since its discovery, more than a hundred years ago, and thus remains in its natural beauty.

Penn's Cave Hotel is a frame structure 30x22 ft., three stories in height with twenty-five rooms; kitchen, bath, and wash room. The buildings stand immediately over the Cave.

The location is strictly rural, the climate is all that could be desired; hunting and fishing being a gentleman's place of home for a club. The tract contains six acres of land, and is so situated to give every needed access to the cave property. The description is not adequate. The place must be seen to be appreciated.

Terms: Ten per cent of purchase money to be paid on day of sale, the balance of one-third of purchase money to be paid on confirmation of sale, one-third in cash, the deferred payments to be secured by bond and mortgage on the premises.

CHAPTER III.

The forenoon wore away rather quietly. Desultory fighting was heard ahead among the skirmishers in front. But comparative quiet reigned. Playing cards were at a discount and the men generally threw them away before going into battle, and the ground was thickly strewn with them along the line. The chaplains came up and gathered hastily written wills and letters from the boys to friends at home, to hold and to be mailed after the battle in case of death.

Regiments were seen kneeling, some standing with bared heads while the chaplains prayed for Divine blessing for our army and the national cause.

Everything seemed in complete readiness for the awful work to begin and still quiet reigned and we waited in suspense.

There is no period in a soldier's life that is so trying to his courage as the prolonged wait for a battle to open. The excitement of actual battle; the hurry and shifting and moving, and the awful tumult carries men through storms of danger and scenes of death, and makes heroes of men whose nerves were all unstrung before the battle opened. The waving flags; the hurrying shouts of the men as they press forward in the excitement of the conflict, all have inspiring influences that move men in battle as if unmindful or unconscious of the appalling danger. But when an engagement turns and lines of battle break and the excitement that moved them forward ceases, then the wildest panics and most shameful flights are apt to occur among the bravest of soldiers.

There is no power that can stop the wild rush of a body of panic stricken troops. They will beat down and run over everything that will stand in their way.

Noon came and passed, and still we waited. Every horse in the army was hooked up, or saddled; batteries in position and the cannoners standing by their guns waiting for the order to bring into action their death dealing machinery.

To our right and left as far as we could see hundreds of tattered and battle-worn flags fluttered defiantly above the lines of their hundred thousand brave and resolute defenders. To the rear of this were seen the beautiful flags and banners of the various head quarters all, unitedly, presenting a scene so great and grand as to be absolutely beyond description.

The sharp reports of the rifles of skirmishers and sharpshooters were continually heard while the occasional boom of a gun on the Confederate side and the fierce screaming of an occasional shell passing over us kept us mindful of the presence of the enemy. Neither army was fully up nor ready for the final contest. Both were rapidly concentrating and taking position in order of battle as they came up.

The 3rd corps, under Gen. Sickles, moved out and occupied Peach Orchard knob on the Emmetsburg road about one mile in advance of our true line of battle, a position which, in military parlance is called a "salient angle." It was an exposed position, with both flanks "in the air" easily "enfiladed" and consequently untenable under heavy attack.

The Confederates seeing this blunder determined to attack and turn this point, our left, seize the Round Tops, the southern key to the entire position of the Union army. Acting on this plan at five o'clock p. m. they furiously attacked the Third corps with an overwhelming force and the battle raged with all the fury that characterizes an engagement in which forty thousand brave men fight for victory or death. The terrible noise of battle and the shouting of the forty thousand desperate, battle-crazed men was something truly appalling. The prolonged Rebel yell told plainly that the Union troops were being defeated and driven from their position. Light reinforcements from other corps were continuously sent piecemeal, but they were beaten in detail and driven back with the troops they had reinforced. The situation became most critical for the Union Cause.

His Last Hope Realized.
(From the Sentinel, Gebo, Mont.)

In the first opening of Oklahoma to settlers in 1889, the editor of this paper was among the many seekers after fortune who made the big race one fine day in April. During his traveling about and afterwards his camping upon his claim, he encountered much bad water, which, together with the severe heat, gave him a very severe diarrhoea which it seemed almost impossible to check, and along in June the case became so bad he expected to die. One day one of his neighbors brought him one small bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy as a last hope. A big dose was given him while he was rolling about on the ground in great agony, and in a few minutes the dose was repeated. The good effect of the medicine was soon noticed and within an hour the patient was taking his first sound sleep for a fortnight. That one little bottle worked a complete cure, and he cannot help but feel grateful. The season for bowel disorders being at hand suggests this item. For sale by C. W. Swartz, Tusseyville; F. A.
