Praises Keith's.

Howard Paul, a noted Englishman, on a recent visit to America, wrote to the London Times concerning Keith's Philadelphia theatre as follows:

The Philadelphia theatres are all closed in June, but I spent an agreeable evening at Keith's, where an entertaining variety show goes on all the year around—no matter what the weather may be—and it presents what is termed here a "continuous performance," beginning about one o'clock and going on until 11 p. m. without a break. The same artists appear, of course, twice, perhaps thrice, during the hours devoted to the representation. Through the courtesy of Mr. H. T. Jordan, the resident manager of Keith's, I was able to look over the edifice, and examine most of its cleverly contrived details, and it is unquestionably the handsomest theatre, architecturally as well as the most sumptuously equipped, I have seen in any country. We have no theatre to compare with it in England. The cheap top gallery is as prettily appointed as the stall and dress circles usually are in English theatres. There is even a boudoir and retiring room for ladies in the top gallery where if they desire to rest there is an attendant to look after them, and if they wish to write a letter there is an escrutoire, paper, pen and ink, without charge. Mr. Jordan told me that should a lady fall ill she is sent home in a carriage and the management pays the expense and cab-hire.

Apropos of Keith's, the interior embellishments and appointments are in the most perfect taste. There is not a note of discord from the entrance door to the back of the stage. I was so struck with the elegance and harmony of the decorative appointments that I enquired of Mr. Jordan who was responsible for them, and he told me that Mr. E. F. Albee, the general manager of Mr. Keith's circuit of theatrical enterprises, was the artistic mind that had superintended and directed the ornate portions of the sumptuous edifice. Mr. Keith is a millionaire, and he deserves his prosperity, for he has made it a point to give the public the value of their money, not only in the performances but in the luxurious buildings he has erected for their reception.
