Nature as a Road Builder.

Nature as a road builder outdoes the state or local supervisor of roads. The roads at present are as good as one could wish them, and all is due to the even temperature of the weather. The rough places have been beaten down and the stones and soil are so closely united that an ordinary vehicle runs over the average township road as though passing over a race course.

Engine House Burned,

The engine house of the Central Railroad of Pennsylvania, located at Bellefonte, was destroyed by fire Wednesday night of last week. It is supposed the fire originated from a stove. There was an insurance of $3,000 on the building.

Two engines were in the engine house at the time of the fire. One of these, the Nehasane, was valued at about twelve thousand dollars, and the other one at about three thousand dollars. The former, it is thought, can be repaired. A great number of tools were also burned. There was no insurance on either engine or tools. -
