STEADY ATMOSPHERE.

A Prime Requisite For the Study of The Twenty-fifth and Fiftleth Anniversaries Planet Surfaces. Astronomical science is divided naturally into two parts, that pertaining to the stellar universe and that pertaining to our own immediate family of planets. The latter are the only bodies in the heavens of which we are aware that at all resemble our earth, and they are all, comparatively speaking, our married life. The immediate friends near neighbors and have; therefore, a and relatives, about twenty-five in much more personal and popular interest than the stellar universe at large. invitation to celebrate the event with The study of their relative motions them. For this study there is one paramount requisite, and that is a steady the good things of the season and that atmosphere. With a good atmosphere important results may be obtained even with a small telescope of only five or six inches diameter; but without such an atmosphere the very largest telescope will be of no avail. This is not the case in other departments of astronomy; for many kinds of observations on the stellar universe the quality of the atmosphere is of little account, provided only that it is cloudless and transparent; but for the planetary and lunar astronomy a steady atmosphere is the fundamental requisite. To understand what is meant by a steady atmosphere we have only to look at some object across a hot stove or along the line of a railroad track upon a summer day. There is a shimmer in the air, a wavering motion, with which we are all more or less familiar. This wavering is always present in our atmosphere, although we usually cannot see it; but when we magnify the image of a planet in a telescope 1,000 times we magnify the atmospheric tremors in the same proportion, and Wilson, of Aluona, who attended the they are then not only conspicuous. wedding fifty years sgo, are living but they interfere very seriously with

In some parts of the world the atmosphere is much more steady than in others, and it is evidently a matter of the highest importance for the astronomer interested in planetary research To illustrate the importance of this matter I may say that situated in one of these favored spots I saw night after night with a five inch and even with a four inch lens planetary markings and details that I have never seen even with the largest telescope in Cambridge.-W. Tuesday morning was the coldest for this winter.

The illustrated lecture on "Ten nights in a bar room," given by T. A. Elliott, in the Evangelical church on Saturday night, was a success in every way. Despite the very cold weather a good audience was present. The scenes were large, life-like and thrilling. The speaker held the audience from start to finish. The beautifully illustrated temperance songs brought tears to many eyes. These entertainments will be given in adjoining towns in the near future, and should be attended by all.

Bismarck as a Court Officer.

It was while a student at Berlin or a little later that Bismarck served for a few months as court officer. An oft told story of that time will bear repetition here: A witness annoyed Bismarck so much that at last he lost all patience and threatened to throw the man out. Then the judge interfered.

"The court will itself attend to all the throwing out that is done here," said the magistrate, and the taking of testimony proceeded. Later the witness again became obstreperous. Bismarck jumped up in a rage, but, bethinking himself in time, turned his indignation into a humorous channel. "Sir," he yelled, "if you don't behave yourself I shall have his honor the judge throw you out of this courtroom with his own hands!"

Cannel Coal and "Jet."

Cannel coal is a variety of bituminous coal which burns with great freedom, the flame of it affording considerable light. It was called "candle coal" by the English people who first used it, as it often served as a substitute for candles. The name became corrupted to "cannel" and has so remained. It is more compact than ordinary bituminous coal, and it can be wrought in a lathe and polished. A certain variety of it found in Yorkshire, England, is manufactured into a kind of jewelry known as jet.
