STOPPING RUNAWAYS

HOW THE NEW YORK PARK POLICE HORSE ENJOYS THE WORK.

The Story of a Glorious Run That Was Only an Incident in the Life of Skipper—A Race That Ended in the Capture of the Runaway Roan.
How the horses of the New York park mounted policemen enjoy catching runaway, which is the most exciting part of their work, is told by Sewell Ford in "Horse Nine." The author says of his equine hero:
For half an hour at a time he would stand just on the edge of the roadway and at an exact angle with it motionless as the horse ridden by the bronze soldier up near the mill. Reddy would sit at still in the saddle too. It was hard for Skipper to stand there and see those mining cols go by, their pant housings all a-glimmer, crests on their blinders, jingling their pole chains and switching their absurd little stubs of tails. But it was still more tantalizing to watch the saddle horses enter past in the soft bridle path on the other side of the roadway. But, then, when you are on the force you must do your duty.
One afternoon as Skipper was standing post like this he caught a new note that rose above the hum of the park traffic. It was the quick, nervous beat of hoofs which rang sharply on the hard macadam. There were screams too. It was a runaway. Skipper knew this even before he saw the bell-like moan, the screeching eyes and the foam decked lips of the horse or the scared man in the carriage behind. It was a case of broken rein.
How the sight made Skipper's blood tingle! Wouldn't he just like to show that crazy roan what real running was! But what was Reddy going to do? He felt him gather up the reins. He felt his knees tighten. What! Yes, it must be so. Reddy was actually going to try a brush with the runaway. What fun! Skipper pranced out into the roadway and gathered himself for the sport. Before he could get into full swing, however, the roan had shot past with a snort of challenge which could not be misunderstood.
"Oh! You will, eh?" thought Skipper. "Well now, we'll see about that."
Ah a free rein! That is—almost free. And a touch of the spurs! No need for that, Reddy. How the carriages scattered! Skipper caught hasty glimpses of smart hackneys drawn up trembling by the roadside, of women who tumbled from bicycles into the bushes and of men who ran and shouted and waved their hats.
"Just as though that little roan wasn't scared enough already," thought Skipper.
But she did run well. Skipper had to admit that. She had a lead of fifty yards before he could strike his best gait. Then for a few moments he could not seem to gain an inch. But the mare was blowing herself, and Skipper was taking it coolly. He was putting the pent up energy of weeks into his strides. Once he saw he was overhauling her he steeled to the work.
Just as Skipper was about to forge ahead Reddy did a queer thing. With his right hand he grabbed the roan with a nose pinch grip, and with the left he pulled in on the reins. It was a great disappointment to Skipper, for he had counted on showing the roan his heels. Skipper knew after two or three experiences of this kind that this was the usual thing.
These were glorious runs, though. Skipper wished they would come more often. Sometimes there would be two and even three in a day. Then a fortnight or so would pass without a single runaway on Skipper's beat. But duty is duty.

Anecdote of Dumas.
Speaking of Alexandre Dumas, a writer says that his chief characteristic was his utter disregard of money. He made millions, but never had a franc at his command. "For example," said he, "upon one occasion Dumas had invited company to dinner, and finding that he did not stand possessed of a single cent, drove to a friend's and asked him to lend him 2 louis. This his friend readily did, and as Dumas was taking his leave suggested, as he had just been getting some very fine pickles, he would be glad to give him a jar to add to his dinner. The servant was sent for the pickles, and when he put the jar in the carriage, Dumas, having no other change about him, dropped the 2 louis in the man's hand."
Caution.
"Well, bub, what is it?" asked the druggist of the small boy with a bottle in his hand.
"Please, sir, but here's the medicine I got for me mother an hour ago."
"Yes, and what's the matter with it?"
"You didn't write on the bottle whether it was to be taken eternally or infernally, and she's afraid of making a mistake."—Detroit Free Press.
The Museum Method.
Museum Agent—What's wrong with our new midget? He doesn't seem to draw.
Manager—Of course not. See what a mess you've made of the advertisement. You've put his height at three feet. Make it thirty-six inches, and the people will come with a rush.—New York Weekly.

THEIR BLASE CONVERSATION.
"The thing to do" said his social adviser, "is to be blasé."
"I know, I know," was the reply, "but it's such dreadfully hard work to be blasé."—Chicago Post.
