ALFALFA Will grow anywhere if the conditions are made right, and give from 40 to 50 dollars worth of Protein to the acre. Absence of the proper soil bacteria is the most common difficulty, and is easily overcome by using 200 to 500 lbs. of impregnated soil to the acre, at or after seeding. I can furnish soil from a fifteen year old field that gave over 4 tons of hay to the acre last year, and where the bacteria is very abundant. Send for prices. F. E. DAWLEY, Fayetteville, N. LETTER FROM ILLINOIS.

J. M. Stiller, of Freeport, Illinois, writes an interesting letter.

Conditions are rather unfavorable for all kinds of vegetation in this immediate locality. Rains are purely local, far between, and they all seem to describe a circle leaving us in the center—high and dry. Cool nights have prevailed all spring—rather a bad feature for growing corn.

Early planted corn, on good soil and well tended, will average more than two feet high and appears green and thrifty against so many odds, while the late plantings can hardly be seen at a few rods distant.

The pea crop is poor owing to dry weather. About three hundred acres are devoted to this crop in this section, for canning purposes while about 1200 acres are cropped with different kinds of sweet corn, for the same purpose, in this locality, each year.

Little trouble was had in securing a good stand of sweet corn, while much difficulty was realized in getting a sufficient stand of common field corn owing to a damaged condition of the germ. Good seed corn sold readily at from two to three dollars per bushel.

The hay crop will average light; red and alfalfa clovers were badly affected by the winter. Timothy will be heavy on good soils. The writer has experimented with alfalfa and various other clovers for the past ten years, and attaches very much importance to alfalfa as a forage plant, while it ranks highly as a soil builder when properly inoculated with nitrogen absorbing bacteria. It is a great drought resistor.

Three years ago the second crop developed a growth of two feet with no rain all summer, while the second crop of red clover failed to make any growth and much of it burnt out. To insure a good catch the seed bed should be well enriched and free as possible from weeds. It is easily and should be more extensively grown. The oats and barley crop is heading and much of it is hardy a foot high. Oats sells at forty cents per bushel. Rye is good stands well and is filling well.

Early potatoes are badly in need of rain. Some of the local gardeners are putting their crop on the market; they retail at forty-five to fifty cents per peck. The bug crop is rather numerous in many places. Paris Green, labeled "strictly pure," and embellished with skull and cross-bones, is once more a merchantable commodity.

The strawberry crop was very light, while all other berry fruits will yield poorly. The apple and plum crops will be light. Twig-blight has affected every apple orchard in this section. Some trees appear to have passed through a baptism of fire.

Your correspondent is of the opinion that the Reporter is bettering its roll as a newspaper and as an educational medium, since it has freed its columns of the trashy gossip and offensive personalities that some local papers are always forcing to the attention of their unwilling readers.

FROM OKLAHOMA.

S. J. Krader writes a breezy letter from Mountain View, Oklahoma.

The prospects for good crops this season are excellent. The weather has been all that could be desired; frequent showers in the afternoons and clear, sunny mornings make a combination that cannot be beaten.

Fifteen miles south of us is the Reserve, a section of land held by the Government for the Indians, for pasture and hunting. In the mountains lying between is an abundance of game—deer, antelope, mountain lions, immense wild cats. I killed two of these cats which were three feet, four inches long. They come in from the mountains and prey upon the chickens and turkeys of both Indians and settlers. A rattler from these same mountains was seven feet, two inches long, three and three-fourths inches thick and had eighteen rattles.

The Kiowa Indians are holding a large camp meeting a few miles away on the Wichita river. They have had a goodly number of conversions. There are two hundred small tents and two larger ones. The latter are used for conference with inquirers. Their auditorium is an immense arbor made of leafy branches. It has a table in the center and seats on two sides but most of the hearers sit on the ground which is in part covered with canvas on which the squaws sit with their papooses.

As a rule they wear gaily decorated moccasins but you must not think there is any lack of style. If you were to visit their camp expecting to see the blankets and feathers of your story books you would be disappointed. White shirts, stiff collars, silk dresses and shawls, fine shoes, stockings both white and black. The men have their hair braided with the national colors of which they are very proud.

They sing our own familiar hymns and the dear old doxology in their language in a way to stir one's blood.
