The boat's manometer indicates our depth now -1,000 fathoms below the surface—and our captain, a careful, brave and experienced submarine skipper, skillfully manipulating the electric switchboard at which he stands—always and ever alert to the dangers of the deep-stops our downward course and points his vessel straight ahead; the pressure of an electric button is simultaneous with a convulsive throb as the mighty engine responds, the glant pro-peller churns the sea into a feaming fury and with a leap and bound, as of a frightened thing of life, we plunge forward through the transparent watery mass to explore the unknown depths.

The denizens of the sea startled into an activity they have seldom known, so engross our attention, the approach of a mammoth narwhale or unicorn of the sea is quite unnoticed until almost upon us. The atfirst startled pasuntil almost upon us. The atfirst startled passengers are quickly reassured by the captain. There is no danger; our armament has been well looked to in the emergency of attack, but as the monster fish playfully circles around sail upon our ears; presently the massive jaws of our friendly inclined escort open and reveal a semi-earthly being, contentedly sive jaws of our friendly inclined escort open and reveal a semi-earthly being, contentedly seated on its monster green tongue, and in a fine basso voice is singing the lay of the deep blue sea; the torpedo-like velocity of our craft, however, soon leaves the serenader, far in our wake, the echoes of this presumably Jonah's voice, have hardly died away, when far ahead and immediately in our course is seen the mermaid's play-ground, various kinds of isis, clusters of pure tuft coral, and prickly fungiform a beautiful garden ou the ocean's bed; a shoal of mermaids den on the ocean's bed; a shoal of mermaids appear to our now thoroughly delighted visions, the delicately tinted gold and silver be-scaled bodies gracefully bounding over, under and around the boat, as if imbued with earthly vanity, they would rival each other's brightness.

With never-ending and tircless energy, our great speed undiminished, we rush madly on; our goal is soon at hand; the pumps are set in motion—the water drawn from the tanks. Our now buoyant vessel speedily finds the surface, and the thrilling subterranean passage has ended. Disembarking, we are guided to the base of Elifel Tower; immense guided to the base of Einer rower; manual clevators take us to its summit, where a massive airship restlessly tugging at its mooring awaits to carry us back over land and sea. All aboard! Cast anchor; and the birdlike wings moving up and down, the flight through space has commenced. Paris soon fades from view as with the speed of light we rush along the pathless wastes; meteors, rush along the pathless wastes; meteors, comets, beasts of the air, and lightning storms are encountered, but undismayed is the captain of this weird craft, and emerging from a bank of clouds, our astonished and bewildered senses are now completely dazed at the vision that greets our eyes—the World's Fair is spread out immediately below us; gently the airship descends and discharges her precious cargo of mystified and delighted passengers at the Pike landing dock, we have enjoyed a marvelous experience and completed our trip, under and over the sea.
