Mrs. Knoffsinger was the widow of the late James Knoffsinger, of Pleasant Gap. Burial took place at Warren.

PHOTOGRAPHER'S SAD PLIGHT.

Man Suddenly Appears at State College and Causes Pair's Arrest.

Captain M. A. Caulkins, a traveling photographer, appeared in Bellefonte December 15 with a young woman who passed as his wife. They took a room at Phillip Beezer's boarding house and remained there several weeks. Caulkins said he was authorized to organize Sons of Veterans' camps and had Gregg Post, G. A. R., of Bellefonte interested.

The pair went to State College Wednesday of last week, and Samuel C. Hoovler, of Tionesta, who says he is the husband of the woman, appeared in Bellefonte with his father, J. C. Hoovler, and a warrant was issued for the arrest of the pair, charging them with elopement. They were placed in the county jail, when the woman fainted several times, it being necessary to call a physician. Their hearing took place Thursday morning.

The woman's attacks during the night rendered her very weak, and when taken to Justice Keichline's office she fainted, and it was thought she would die. She became delirious and pleaded for her mother. She is very ill and likely will be sent to the hospital.

Caulkins was held under $500 bail, and being unable to secure it was sent back to prison. Mrs. Hoovler is said to have left a husband and two children at Tionesta, and Caulkins a wife and three children at Oil City.

A Beautiful Memorial.

The great St. Louis Exposition of 1904, unrivaled as the greatest of all the World's fairs, is now a scene of desolation. Fortunately, the beauties of its magnificent architecture and fairy-like palaces are preserved in a series of thirty artistic portfolios, containing several hundred views of the buildings and scenes at the Fair, from photographs taken especially for the work by the official photographer of the Exposition, and constituting a permanent memorial of its vanished grandeur. They were designed to sell at $7.50, but the New York World has made special arrangements to furnish a limited number of sets at cost—$3.00 for the set of thirty. Address, The World, P. O. Box 1730, New York.

Building at Howard Collapses.

Tuesday of last week about 4 o'clock the large new main building of the Howard brick works collapsed under the weight of the new slate roof, which Contractor William Austin was in the process of putting on, and carried with it Joseph Schwenk and Nathaniel Fletcher, who were on the roof at the time, breaking Schwenk's left leg and otherwise bruising him and badly bruising and cutting Fletcher. The building was 40x120 in dimensions, and was regarded as a substantial structure. When the crash came Contractor Austin was inside, but succeeded in getting from under the falling wreckage. Five other men were under the roof, but they also succeeded in getting out, but without a second's time to spare. Had they been caught all would undoubtedly have been killed.

Marshall College who did some very queer things, but when he went before his history class to teach a battle, the battle field was there before their eyes, and the students were compelled to take sides with one army or the other.

Dr. Harbaugh once saw a sign which read "A Live Blacksmith," and he wrote an article which attracted a great deal of attention, in which he showed the need of life and enthusiasm in all of our work. What we need is not teachers who, at the end of the day lock the door with a sigh of relief, the only regret being that it must be reopened the next day. What we need is teachers who are alive, in earnest. The ancient Greeks despised those who taught for money. I do not mean to say that teachers should work without pay. Their salaries ought to be much larger. But we ought not to teach for money only, but for the love and interest we have for the children. The teacher has a position little lower, if any, than the minister, and we ought to be in earnest. The word enthusiasm means "God within." It is the teacher who has God in his work who will arouse interest on the part of the pupils.

"Variety is the very spice of life," and this is especially true in some branches of school work. If we wish to arouse interest we must devise means by which to vary the work and relieve the monotony.

We can do a great deal towards arousing interest by showing how studies are related to one another and to the human life today. Show how mathematics is involved in all our business transactions; how events of today depend upon happenings thousands of years ago; how our very alphabet we get from the ancient Egyptians. We must often first educate the tastes of those whom we would help.

Above all, we must first betget in those whom we would help, a new birth. To quote the words of another, "One of the chief blessings of education is the opening of the eyes and ears, the quickening of the senses of touch and taste, so that the individual may be brought into vital relations with the universe of being around him. Few men, if any, see everything in their surroundings. They see only those things for which the eye of the soul has been opened." That is our work as teachers. We must first betget in our pupils a new spirit, we must open their eyes and ears, and if we do this, the question of arousing interest in uninteresting things will largely solve itself.

Harry F. Burkholder: In order to create interest the teacher must have a thorough knowledge of the subject he is teaching, which will gain the confidence of the pupils. The teachers interest in the lesson taught begets interest in the pupils, their interest secures attention, and interest and attention insure application and progress. One of the chief causes of lack of interest in pupils is the lack of scholarship in the teacher.

"Are monthly tests beneficial and in what way?"

J. R. Bible: Pupils so often fail to realize the full meaning of their school duties, but think it a mere process of repetition from day to day of material of no visible import, and therefore of no further use beyond the hour of recitation, not knowing that the primary object of all education is expansion and development of the mind. Monthly tests, or still better, more frequent reviews, have a great influence to fix facts in the memory. The improvement of the memory requires the cultivation of the habit of attention; intense application of the mind.

Prof. W. A. Krise read an appropriate poem.

"Reading and composition methods," was the last topic discussed Saturday forenoon. Miss Edna Krumrine was the first speaker. Through an error the notes prepared for this report are not on hand.

Miss Rebecca J. Moyer: Composition is such an important part of a child's education that it should be begun immediately upon the pupil's entrance into school. At first complete oral sentences, and later the work should be written.

The stated rules of composition, such as the use of commas, periods, capital letters and the interrogation point, should be taught from the beginning, and thus ward off mistakes that are hard to remedy in more advanced work.

To have pupils reproduce stories read to them or by themselves, to describe familiar objects and games, and plenty of practice in letter-writing—all these furnish material for composition work. But a thorough interest in this work must be aroused to make it effective.

Such work, except that it shall be more advanced, should be continued through the higher grades, as they will find it very beneficial throughout their work.

As to methods in reading and creating interest in reading there are an infinite number of devices. Clearness of voice, good enunciation, perfectness of expression, proper inflection and an intelligent manner are all essentials to be striven after by the teacher.

The Saturday afternoon session was occupied by a talk on "Leads in the Public Schools" by Superintendent C. L. Gramley.

WAR AIDS AMERICANS.

American Missionary Tells How Noblemen Vie in Honoring Yankee Families.

The Rev. J. P. Moore, a missionary of the Reformed church, in Japan, in a letter written from Tokio, says that one of the results of the Russo-Japanese war is the growing feeling of friendliness among the Japanese for foreigners, especially for Americans. To be an American or Englishman in these days, he says, is to have special favors shown to you.

Mr. Moore writes: "Some of the younger members of the high-class families seek entrance into foreign families, even into missionary families, because of the advantages afforded them in such homes. I have had a Prince visit me from time to time, for the purpose of receiving instruction in English and to cultivate social and friendly intercourse.

"We now have living with us two grown-up sons of General Kuroki, commander of the first Japanese army, and the hero of many battles. This shows that the best classes of the nation have the highest confidence in, and respect for, the people who hail from America."
