

Editor Tyrone Herald Dead.

Major Charles Sullivan Worrell Jones, editor, proprietor and publisher of the Tyrone (daily and weekly) Herald, after an illness of ten days, died at his home, 1101 North Logan avenue, Saturday evening, of kidney and heart trouble. The deceased was the son and eighth child of Samuel and Elizabeth (Mattern) Jones, both deceased, and was born at Graysville, Huntingdon county, October 29, 1842, and at death was aged sixty-two years, six months and seven days. His parents came to Tyrone in 1851 and that has been Major Jones' home ever since.

He served three years in the army. Under President Harrison he was postmaster at Tyrone, and held many other positions of trust.

Interment took place Wednesday. Major Jones was twice married. His first wife was Miss Anna N. Harper, to whom he was united July 1, 1869. To this union were born two children, Amber (deceased) and Miss Ange, well known in Centre Hall, who survives the father. Mrs. Jones died April 14, 1883. His second wife was Miss Mary M. Minary, to whom he was united June 1, 1892. One child (now deceased) blessed this union. The wife survives the husband.

Honesty Rewarded.
It is seldom that real honesty is not rewarded. This is demonstrated by the transaction noted below:

Some time ago Rowland Watts, a Baltimore fertilizer agent, came to Centre Hall and secured a rig at Boozzer's livery and James Fetterolf as driver. A trip was made through the western part of the county, and at Scotia the agent took the train. On reaching his next stopping place, Mr Watts discovered that he had lost $30 in paper money, but had no idea where he and his money had parted. When reaching home Mr. Fetterolf reported that he had found a wad of money wrapped in a blank piece of paper and that he believed that the cash was the property of Mr. Watts, he having been the only stranger who had been in the buggy that day. The information was sent the agent, who related his experience, and later Mr. Boozzer sent his check to Mr. Watts for the corresponding amount. In acknowledging the receipt of the same Mr. Watts enclosed a check of $5 00 for Mr. Fetterolf.

GREEN AND DILLEN.
THE TRIAL.

At the August term of court Dillen and Green were found guilty of murder in the first degree. Their trial began Thursday morning, August 25, and the jury did not render a verdict until Sunday morning at 9:30 o'clock. The prisoners did not show any visible agitation when the words "guilty in the first degree" were declared to them.

Attorney Furst, lawyer for the defendants, immediately made a motion for a new trial, and since then to the very day of the execution, the attorneys for the condemned men took every honorable advantage of the law to secure any clemency the authorities might be willing to grant.

The last move was a plea of insanity for Green. The governor was appealed to, but he refused to interfere unless the local court would appoint a commission. Judge Orvis was one of the prosecuting attorneys, and consequently could not hear the evidence in the case, and it became necessary to invite Judge Auten to decide the matter. The Northumberland county judge decided adversely. Green and Dillen had to hang.

Those who are apt to criticize are those who are very frequently least worthy to do it. The world often misjudges men and women, because it doesn't know the motive or necessities that prompt them to do things that may seem foolish. The older a man gets, if nature has been fair to him in fitting out his upper story, the more closely he clings to the theory that the average man or woman has no time to pluck notes from their neighbors eyes. To be a little plainer, every man and woman has about enough to do to attend to their own business, and those who are prone to interest themselves in the business or morals of their neighbors are in most cases neglecting their own.
