CENTRE HALL, PA., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1906.

13 INNINGS-6-5.

It was suspected all along in some quarters that the much-boasted feat of Centre Hall Wins Over Yeagertown in a Well Played Game, the erection of the new capitol within the appropriation of some four or five million dollars would not stand the test of a critical examination. It now appears that this suspicion was well founded. It is alleged that the building really cost at least $8,000,000 and that in addition to the specific appropriations for the purpose, much other money was used. The opportunities Pitcher Moore is the regular pitcher thus opened for favored contractors to make large profits will be evident. The people of the State would prob ably not have objected to a larger direct appropriation being made for the capitol, but this did not suit the machine leaders. They wanted the amount used for the purpose kept secret so that they could spend much traordinary effort. of it to the advantage of their own henchmen. And so now the people are suddenly confronted with the fact that the building has cost double the amount which they have all along been told it would. The discovery is not a surprise to those who know so last forty years. To such it would have been surprising if there had not been such a revelation. The charges now made render it vitally important that the next auditor general shall be a man who will get at the bottom of the facts in this matter. The people of Pennsylvania will want to know just how much the capitol did cost and who got the money. Only by electing William T. Creasy can they secure this information. And while speaking of the capitol it is pertinent to note the fact that while the machine candidate for governor, Mr. Stuart, has been invited to the ceremony of the dedication, no such invitation has been sent his opponent, Mr. Emery. In other words, the idea is to make the affair a partisan one, although it is a matter in which the whole people of the State are interested. However, while Mr. Emery will not be at the dedication of the capitol, he will, beginning with next January and for four years thereafter, occupy the governor's office in the building, and will see to it that Cheap Food Likely. the building is regarded as the property of the whole people, and not of the Penrose machine.

Familiarity with the free school has perhaps dulled the sense of appreciation, yet the assemblage of 1,250,000 boys and girls in the free schools of the state is a fact which stamps the far-sighted men who founded the system here as great public benefactors. The educational value of the common schools is not ascertained by any census, but if results respond to the sum total of expenditures made on behalf of the system in Pennsylvania our state should stand among the most enlightened communities in the average intelligence of its people. The universities, colleges and private schools contribute their share of the education of the public, but the common school is the foundation of the educational fabric. What are the Pennsylvania tax payers contributing to the support of this important institution? In 1905 the amounted to $14,142,470. Over $5,000,-000 was paid for school-houses. The textbooks cost $703,771; supplies, $700,-777. Other expenses amounted to $7, 557,170. The total outlay for the year was $28,565,457. This was sufficient to support 31,319 schools and pay the wages of 32,352 teachers.
