

FROM VISITS DYING WIFE.

Sheriff Kline and Deputy Rees, Bring Accused Murderer of Josiah C. Dale Back to Centre Hall Tuesday to See His Dying Wife.

After all there is humanity in the arm of the law when applied by humane officials. This is proven by the fact that Jacob From, held in the county jail for trial at the May term of court charged with the murder of Josiah C. Dale, was brought to his home at Centre Hall by Sheriff Kline and Deputy Rees Tuesday afternoon that he might spend a short time with his dying wife. The trip was made without any special incident happening, the prisoner at no time displaying any disposition other than to be obedient.

Mrs. From's condition is very serious. At present the woman is having all the care any one can wish for. Miss Virna Reark, who took a course in nursing on the Pacific Slope, goes daily to the From home and lends her professional aid. The home is being taken care of by Mrs. Jerry Miller, of Du Bois, a half-sister of Mrs. From's.

Fire at Beaver Dam.

The log barn on the Adam Grenoble farm, now owned by Hon. Wm. M. Allison, and tenanted by Charles Hackenberg, located near the Beaver Dam school house, below Spring Mills, was burned to the ground Thursday afternoon of last week. The loss to Mr. Allison was about three or four hundred dollars. The barn was empty except a mower and a hay rake were stored there. The reason for this condition was that the farm is tilled by hired help, and the products hauled to Mr. Allison's barn at Spring Mills.

Two pigs, the property of Mr. Hackenberg, were also burned. The building was set on fire by children who were playing with matches, and built a fire near the barn. The strong wind carried the flames to the building and before help came the whole structure was asire.

There was no insurance.

Making the open season for rabbits from October 1 to December 1. Making the open season for killing deer from November 15 to December 1, and prohibiting the killing of doe deer.

DEATHS.

MRS. BOYD A. SPICHER.

An extremely sad death occurred at Pleasant Gap Sunday morning, at which time the wife of Boyd A. Spicher died as a result of confinement, leaving a son a week old.

About three weeks prior to this incident Mr. and Mrs. Spicher moved into their new home, and were looking forward to a pleasant journey through life. Fate ruled otherwise.

Mrs. Spicher was aged about twenty-six years, and was a daughter of the late Joseph Tressler. Besides her husband and infant son, she leaves to mourn her loss her mother, Mrs. Sarah Tressler, who made her home with the daughter, and two sisters—Mrs. Thomas Williams and Mrs. William Ross, both of Pleasant Gap.

Interment was made Wednesday at Pleasant Gap, the pastor of the Methodist church, of which denomination the deceased was a member, officiating.

His oldest daughter is now ill from that disease, although in a light form. The members of Mr. Lingle's family were all vaccinated as soon as the disease was known to be in that neighborhood, and the light attack of the loathsome plague is credited to that precaution having been taken.

Another Triumph of Art.

A young New York artist says that he was in Vermont on a sketching trip one summer. One day while strolling along a pretty lane he overtook a particularly picturesque little fellow who was sauntering along with a fishing pole on his shoulder and a string of small fish in his hand. He looked so much the part of the small country boy of poetry and fiction that the artist decided he would like to make a sketch of him, and after considerable negotiation this was arranged for, the lad, in accordance with directions, perching himself on a rail fence. As the artist worked away at his sketch an old countryman came down the lane and stood looking over his shoulder.

"By gum! That certainly beats all hemlock!" the old fellow presently exclaimed admiringly.

"Like the picture, do you?" the artist asked, with a pleased flush.

"Oh, 'tain't that, though it ain't so bad. What I meant was the way you manage to keep that boy quiet so long."—New York Herald.

To Tell a Fashionable Restaurant.

"When I was young," said an old bachelor, "at all the fashionable restaurants you wrote your order. That was the way to distinguish the really fashionable restaurant. You wrote your order there, whereas in the common one you gave it to the waiter orally. Ordering is a difficult matter. It is a thing, especially when one has guests, that one is likely to get flustered over; hence I always liked to write my order. It kept me cool. But a waiter, standing over me, suggesting dishes I didn't want, hurrying me, had the power to rattle me completely. But fashionable restaurants no longer are to be distinguished by this writing business. Writing has disappeared from them. They are to be distinguished now by their French menus—both some things that call a sweetbread a ris de veau, a pople a vol au vent and a leg of mutton a gigot."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

A City of the Past.

Rimini is full of associations with thrilling people of the past. It was here that Caesar crossed the Rubicon. We crossed ourselves on the very bridge his feet had touched. It was here, too, that St. Anthony came to preach and, finding no people who would give heed to him, turned in despair and preached to the fishes, who raised their heads out of the water to listen to him. There is a chapel which marks the spot where he stood by the water. In Rimini lived Paolo and Francesca, the tragedy of whose love every one knows.—Travel Magazine.

INDIAN LODGES.

Homes of the Savages in the Days of the Buffalo.

While in buffalo days some of the wild Indians of the plains occupied permanent dwellings during a part of the year, there were others who lived wholly in movable lodges.

These were made of buffalo skins tanned white and sewed together. They were of different sizes, the poor occupying smaller lodges, while the wealthy man, he who owned many horses, very likely had a large family and required a larger lodge. The size of a man's lodge was to some extent an indication of his wealth. Two horses were needed to drag the poles of a large lodge and one to carry the lodge itself, three horses for the transportation of the dwelling alone, to say nothing of the other property and the different members of the family.

A lodge of moderate size required eleven skins, and eighteen poles were needed to set it up. A sixteen skin lodge required twenty-two poles. The larger the lodge the greater was the number of poles needed. From the fact that they used an unusual number of poles in setting up their lodges it resulted that the Cheyennes had well stretched, nice looking lodges.

The northern Cheyennes declare that an odd number of hides was always used for the best lodges, and the number might range from eleven to twenty-one. The skins were sewed together with sinew thread. First, of course, the hides must be tanned, the hair removed and the skin softened. Then the Cheyenne woman held a wing bee which was not unlike the bees of our ancestors in the early days of this country. She invited her friends to come and help her sew her lodge and provided them with refreshments. Among them was always one woman especially skillful in cutting out the lodges, and she fitted the skins together before the women began to sew them. Forest and Stream.

HOLDING A CAMERA.

Some Practical Suggestions to the Beginner in Photography.

One of the most important lessons for a beginner to learn is to hold the camera in the proper position during exposure. Whenever there are corners of buildings or other objects which give vertical lines the camera must be held absolutely level. If this is not done, the building in the picture will appear to be falling either backward or forward, according to the way in which the camera is tilted.

There are times, however, when the camera may be tilted to an advantage. In some cases it is an absolute necessity. For example, in photographs of clouds, waterfalls, balloons, etc., the camera may point upward, while in taking pictures of people swimming or bathing, children at work or play, etc., it may be pointed downward.

Very successful photographs of prominent speakers, parades, crowds, etc., have been taken when the camera was upside down. It makes no difference in the negative whether the camera is right side up or not. By holding the camera in the way suggested many a photographer has secured good pictures, while others who tried to use the camera in the usual way made absolute failures.

Often by holding the camera by the side of the body and pointing it backward one may secure pictures of children at play and of older people in natural poses without the knowledge of any members of the group.

Another warning to beginners is necessary. Do not try to take a time exposure while holding the camera in the hand. Even if the camera is held against the breast and respiration stopped the action of the heart is sufficient to cause the lens to vibrate and spoil the picture.—Circle Magazine.

Stripped at the Law.

Dickens described in his novel "Bleak House" the woes of those who were involved in suits in the chancery court and the delays to which they were subjected before the English judicial procedure was reformed. Tradition says that an artist once represented the same idea in much less space. Two suitors in chancery, being reconciled to each other after a very tedious and expensive suit, applied to him to paint a device in commemoration of their return to peace and amity. He gave them entire satisfaction by painting them in the act of shaking hands—one clad in his shirt, the other without even that.

Wants More Than Beauty.

The modern Englishman has more cool common sense than his great-grandfather. A beautiful woman attracts his eye, and he may have a passing fascination, but that feeling is only a transient one unless Miss Beauty has other recommendations. If he cannot get beauty combined with usefulness, he goes in for plainness.—London Women's Life.

Class Application.

"Now that you are about to go to college, my son, let me enjoin upon you to bear in mind one thing."

"What is that, dad?"

"It is this, my boy—the greatest results are always achieved by close application."

"Why, dad, you talk just like a porous plaster."—Stray Stories.
