It is unfortunate enough to lose a single cow, but when they go in pairs as they did for John Runkle, tenant on the Dr. C. Stuart Runkle farm, east of Old Fort, it makes a farmer wish they could be replaced for less than $50 each. Mr. Runkle's cows both died from blosting. They were being herded by Mr. Runkle's son, Waliace in a newly mown field, when the lad noticed the animal was acting strangely. He went to the house, and imparted the news, and Mr. Runkle just came within sight when the animal dropped over. The second cow also died before any remedy could be given. Farmer D. K. Keller also lost a valuable cow a few days ago.

The Children's Day service held in Methodist caurch Sunday evening was a repetition of the evidence that the children are the most interesting creatures in existence.
