paper that Whistler was born in Baltimore. Although this was contrary to fact, Whistler could not be induced to correct it. The mistake was copied over and over again, and angry patriots from Massachusetts, accidentally the birthplace of this citizen of the world, would write impassioned letters to him asking him to deny the libel. All he could be prevailed upon to say was, "If it pleases any one to have me born in Baltimore, let me be born in Baltimore." An individual halling from Lowell, Mass., once apostrophized him in the generally insulting manner which certain people regard as etiquette in addressing a man of genius upon a first introduction.

Washington Irving, who wrote the following lines on the value of trifles, evidently believed in them as emblems of friendship;

"There is something, after all, in those trifles that friends bestow upon each other which is an unfatting indication of the place the giver holds in the affections. I would believe that one who preserved a lock of hair, a simple flower or any trifle of my bestowing loved me, though no show was made of it, while all the protestations in the world would not win my confidence in one who set no value on such little things. Trifles they may William, at St. Louis, and Henry, at and disposition are oftenest revealed."

Just For a Change. "What I want," said the theatrical manager, "is a genuine novelty." "Something realistic?" asked the
