An Eccentric Doctor.

Dr. Zaharin was one of the most fa mous as he was also the most eccentric of physicians in Russia. Even when he was summoned to attend Czar Alexander III. in his last illness Dr. Zaharin required the same preparation for his visit to the palace as to any of his patients' homes-that is to say, all dogs had to be kept out of the way, all clocks stopped and every door thrown wide open. Following a process of gradual undressing, he left his furs in the hall, his overcoat in the next room, his galoches in the third and, continuing, arrived at the bedside in ordinary indoor costume. This was only one phase of Dr. Zaharin's golden theory that "you should take a rest before you are tired." Accordingly he sat down after walking every few yards and every eight steps in going upstairs. From the patient's relatives and every one else in the house he required absolute silence until he spoke to them, when his questions had to be answered by "Yes" or "No" and nothing more. To the actual patient, however, he was courtesy and considera-

The March of the Waiters. The old St. Nicholas hotel that flourished in New York, on Broadway, near Spring street, put on more style than any house of its time. The waiters' march was an evolution of which any military command in the country might have been proud. In those days the head waiter was a master of tactics. When the guests were seated he snapped his fingers, and in marched the walters with tray loads of eatables. Keeping perfect step, each marched to his designated table and paused until the head waiter snapped his fingers twice, when down went the trays with a rattle. At the signal of three snaps himself, but can pay the freight. covers were removed and dishes arranged for the comfort and convenience of the guests. The army then posed statuesquely until four snaps, when it right about wheeled and retreated to the kitchen. All meats, by the way, were carved in the open dining room. The St. Nicholas carver weighed about 390 pounds. He had grown stout breathing the savory odors of roasts. Inquisitive guests used to linger near to see him manipulate the goods for the children.-Kreamer &
