The Philosophy Of Hustling.

D. MORGAN, Hippodrame Building, CLEVELA D. O.

The American moves rapidly, but if you should infer from this that he is always in a hurry, you would make a mistake. His fundamental philosophy is that you must be quick sometimes if you do not wish to be hurried always. You must condense, you must eliminate, you must save fime on the little things in order that you may have more time for the larger things. He systematizes his correspondence, his office-work, all the details of his business, not for the sake of system, but for the sake of getting through with his work. In his office hangs a printed motto, "This is my busy day." He does not arrive at the railway station 15 minutes before the departure of his train, because he has something else that he would rather do with those 15 minutes. He does not like to spend an hour in the barber shop, because he wishes to get out to his country club in good time for a game of golf and a shower bath afterward. He likes to have a full life, in which one thing connects with another promptly and neatly, without unnec-essary intervals. His characteristic attitude is not that of a man in a hurry, but that of a man concentrated on the thing in hand to save time .--- Henry Van Dyke, in American Magazine.
